These cruelties might have been literally practised by the Chaldeans upon the Israelites; but the sense of the passage is, that all the glories and ornaments of Jerusalem would be defaced, and that after the inhabitants had been carried away captive, the city would be set on fire and reduced to a heap of ashes. *Calmet, W. —— thou shalt break the sherds thereof,] Severe affliction is often described as a cup occasioning drunkenness: "O thou drunken, but not with wine:" here the image is extended farther. The cup, already drained to the dregs, is represented as broken, and the sherds used in the frenzy of despair as instruments of self-torture. Dr. Wells.

Aholibah? yea, declare unto them their abominations;

37 That they have committed adultery, and blood is in their hands, and with their idols have they committed adultery, and have also caused their sons, whom they bare unto me, to pass for them through the fire, to devour them.

38 Moreover this they have done unto me: they have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned my sabbaths.

37. — and blood is in their hands,] They have shed innocent blood, particularly in sacrificing their children, as the verse afterwards expresses. Dr. Wells.

40. — ye have sent for men to come from far, &c.] Their courting the alliances of foreign nations, by complying with their idolatries, is set forth under the representation of the several arts which harlots use to recommend themselves to new lovers, Isai. lvii. 9. W. Lowth.

42. — at ease] Feasting and making merry.

—— Sabeans from the wilderness,] The Sabeans. The word is translated "drunkards" in the margin. The word saba in the Hebrew signifies to drink to excess, from whence comes the participle sebaim, drunkards, which comes very near in sound to the word "Sabeans" in the text. The same word occurs Joel iii. 8; Isai. xlv. 14; in which places it is supposed to denote the inhabitants of Arabia Felix, who were the posterity of Seba, mentioned Gen. x. 7. W. Lowth, Dean Spencer.

—— upon their heads.] That is, upon the hands and heads of these two lewd women, Aholah and Aholibah. See ver. 45. Bracelets and crowns were ornaments proper to brides, (see chap. xvi. 11, 12,) and were likewise presented by lovers to their mistresses. W. Lowth.

45. And the righteous men,] Meaning, the Prophets who foretold the judgments God would inflict upon Samaria and Jerusalem; such as Hosea, Amos, Jeremiah, &c. The Prophets are said to execute those judgments which they foretell: so Ezekiel says of himself, that he was sent "to destroy the city," chap. xliii. 3; that is, to prophesy its destruction. To the same sense we read, Hos. vi. 5, "I have hewed them by the Prophets; I have slain them by the words of My mouth." See Isai. vi. 10; Jer. i. 10. W. Lowth.

46. — a company] The Babylonians.

Chap. XXIV. ver. 1. — in the ninth year,] Ezekiel, who was then a captive in Mesopotamia, saw in spirit the commencement of the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, and he wrote down the date of it that very day, that the Jews who were near him, and who could not fail of knowing in a short time what had happened to the capital of their country, might also learn, that the Prophet did not utter vain prophecies, and that his predictions were no longer to be distrusted. Calmet.

Before CHRIST 590.

3 And utter a parable unto the rebellious house, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Set on a pot, set it on, and also pour water into it:

4 Gather the pieces thereof into it, even every good piece, the thigh, and the shoulder; fill it with the choice bones.

5 Take the choice of the flock, and ‖ burn also the bones under it, and make it boil well, and let them seethe the bones of it therein.

‖ Or, heap.

6 ¶ Wherefore thus saith the Lord GOD; Woe to the bloody city, to the pot whose scum is therein, and whose scum is not gone out of it! bring it out piece by piece; let no lot fall upon it.

7 For her blood is in the midst of her; she set it upon the top of a rock; she poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust;

8 That it might cause fury to come up to take vengeance; I have set her blood upon the top of a rock, that it should not be covered.

9 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; [a] Woe to the bloody city! I will even make the pile for fire great.

[a] Nah. 3. 1. Hab. 2. 12.

12 She hath wearied herself with lies, and her great scum went not forth out of her: her scum shall be in the fire.

13 In thy filthiness is lewdness: because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged, thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more, till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee.

14 I the LORD have spoken it: it shall come to pass, and I will do it; I will not go back, neither will I spare, neither will I repent; according to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they judge thee, saith the Lord GOD.

3. — Set on a pot,] If this figure should appear to any one undignified, let him remember that it bears allusion to the sacred rites of the temple, and therefore nothing low or mean was associated with it in the ideas of the Jews, to whom the prophecy was directed. Bp. Lowth. The destruction of Jerusalem is represented by a boiling pot or caldron, Jer. i. 13; Ezek. xi. 3. W. Lowth.

4. — the choice bones.] The choice joints. These represent the great men of Jerusalem. Abp. Newcome.

5. Take the choice of the flock,] This belongs in sense to the former verse. W. Lowth.

—— burn also the bones under it,] The bones of those who have been unjustly slain in the midst of the city: see chap. xi. 7. W. Lowth. Place the bones at the bottom of the pot under the flesh. Calmet.

6. — Woe to the bloody city,] This is the common character of Jerusalem. So she had made herself, partly by the blood of the Prophets, partly by the blood of innocents offered in the sacrifices of her idols, partly in the violences and outrages, which the higher sort committed upon the meaner people. Reading.

—— whose scum is therein,] Scum denotes filthiness. Jerusalem is the boiling pot, which is not purged from its foul sins: the flesh and bones are the Jews which have fled thither for safety. Bp. Hall.

—— bring it out piece by piece;] Put thou in thy hook and bring out the flesh and bone piecemeal wheresoever it lights, without any choice or deliberation, to shew that every one of them shall be fetched out thence without difference. Bp. Hall.

—— let no lot fall upon it.] Conquerors used to cast lots what share of the vanquished they would save: see 2 Sam. viii. 2; Joel iii. 3. Here there will be no use in lots, for all the principal inhabitants shall be slain. W. Lowth.

7. — she set it upon the top of a rock;] She seemed to glory in her crime, by doing it in the most open and audacious manner, so as to challenge God's vengeance. Dr. Blayney.

—— she poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust;] The words allude to the command of the law, Lev. xvii. 13, that they cover the blood of any beast or other living creature that was slain with dust: which precept was intended, not only to prevent their eating of blood, but also to give men a sort of horrour at the sight of bloodshed. W. Lowth.

8. — I have set her blood upon the top of a rock,] Her punishment shall be as notorious as her sin. W. Lowth, Calmet.

9. — I will even make the pile for fire great.] I will greatly aggravate her judgments. Bp. Hall.

10, 11. Heap on wood, — consume the flesh, &c.] See that full and exquisite vengeance be executed upon the wicked city. Bp. Hall.

11. — that the brass of it] The burning of the brass denotes that the judgments of God would fall upon the city as well as upon the inhabitants. Abp. Newcome.

12. She hath wearied herself with lies,] She hath multiplied her idolatries: idols being elsewhere called lies. W. Lowth.

—— and her great scum went not forth] All her wickedness is still within her unrepented of, unamended. Bp. Hall.

13. In thy filthiness is lewdness:] That rust and scum which is in thee is thine abominable lewdness, or idolatry. Bp. Hall.

—— because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged,] I did what was requisite on My part towards thy conversion, but thou refusedst to comply with those frequent calls and exhortations which I gave thee; (see the note on Jer. xxxi. 18;) and therefore My Spirit shall not strive with thee any longer, but I will proceed to execute My judgments upon thee. W. Lowth.

16. — the desire of thine eyes] Thy wife, the object of thy affection. W. Lowth.

—— with a stroke:] Not by an ordinary death, but by an unexpected blow. Calmet.

CHAP. XXV.

1 God's vengeance, for their insolency against the Jews, upon the Ammonites; 8 upon Moab and Seir; 12 upon Edom, 15 and upon the Philistines.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying, 590.

2 Son of man, set thy face [a] against the Ammonites, and prophesy against them; [a] Jer. 49. 1, &c.

3 And say unto the Ammonites, Hear the

—— and put on thy shoes upon thy feet,] Going barefoot was another expression of sorrow, 2 Sam. xv. 30. W. Lowth. Addison, in his account of the modern mourning of the Jews in Barbary, says, "The relations of the deceased, for seven days after the interment, stir not abroad; or if by some extraordinary occasion they are forced to go out of doors, it is without shoes; which is a token with them that they have lost a dear friend." Harmer.

—— cover not thy lips,] Covering the lips was another token of mourning, Lev. xiii. 45; Micah iii. 7. W. Lowth. The author above mentioned, in his account of the Jews of Barbary, thus describes one of their mourning rites: "They return from the grave to the house of the deceased, where one as chief mourner receives them, with his jaws tied up with a linen cloth, after the same manner that they bind up the dead; and by this the mourner is said to testify, that he was ready to die with his friend. And thus muffled, the mourner goes for seven days; during which time the rest of his friends come twice every twenty-four hours to pray with him." Harmer.

—— and eat not the bread of men.] Of mourners. Abp. Secker. Eat not the bread of consolation wont to be prepared by the humane, and sent to those in deep affliction. Harmer. See the note on Jer. xvi. 7.

18. — and I did in the morning &c.] Of the next day. Syriack Version, Abp. Secker.

21. — I will profane my sanctuary, &c.] I will deliver My temple into the hands of the heathen, and they shall profane and destroy it, chap. vii. 19, 20. That temple wherein you placed your glory, and thought My residence there your greatest protection. W. Lowth.

—— whom ye have left] Whom ye left behind you in the city, when you were carried captive. W. Lowth.

24. Thus Ezekiel is unto you a sign:] See the note on chap. xii. 6, from Fragments to Calmet.

26. That he that escapeth in that day] See chap. xxxiii. 21, 22.

27. In that day shall thy mouth be opened] Then will I give thee a new commission to speak, and that not by signs as at present, but with freedom and plainness; the event, so exactly answering thy predictions, shall give a new authority to what thou speakest. See chap. iii. 26; xxix. 21. W. Lowth.

—— and thou shalt be a sign] See ver. 24.

Ezekiel was a sign to the house of Israel in various instances, and described by sensible representations the miseries, which God was about to bring upon that people. That his predictions were fully accomplished we learn from the conclusion of the books of Kings and Chronicles; from the 39th and 52d chapters of Jeremiah; and most particularly from the Lamentations of that Prophet, who was an eyewitness of the desolations of his country, and the captivity of his people. How long did God wait! how often did He call, "Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest My soul depart from thee; lest I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited!" But she refused to be instructed, and God's soul did depart from her. Let us hear, and fear, and take better impressions from such words of exhortation, and cleanse our hands, and purify our hearts, from the defilement of our sins. Let us speedily embrace the overtures of our peace, whilst the door of mercy stands open; turning without delay from our rebellious ways, and doing those things which are well pleasing to God, that so we may be reconciled to Him, and rejoice in the light of His countenance, and finally obtain from Him the salvation of our souls and bodies, through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Reading.

Chap. XXV. ver. 2. — against the Ammonites,] The chronological order of this chapter is after chap. xxxiii. 21, &c. at a time when not only the taking of Jerusalem was known, but also the conduct which the surrounding nations pursued in consequence of the event. Abp. Newcome. Josephus and Archbishop Usher place the events of the chapter five years after the destruction of Jerusalem. W. Lowth.

The accomplishment of these prophecies has not been distinctly recorded by the Prophets: but Josephus informs us, that, five years after the taking of Jerusalem, Nebuchadnezzar carried the war into Cœle-syria, and afterwards against the Ammonites and the Moabites, and finally against Egypt; and that having achieved the entire conquest of these countries, he returned to Babylon. Calmet.

14 And I will lay my vengeance upon Edom by the hand of my people Israel: and they shall do in Edom according to mine anger and according to my fury; and they shall know my vengeance, saith the Lord GOD.

3. — Because thou saidst, Aha,] Because thou didst insult and rejoice in the profanation of My sanctuary. Bp. Hall. Compare Job xxxix. 25.

4. — to the men of the east] By the men of the East may be meant the Chaldeans, chap. xxi. 19, 20. Ammon is likewise reckoned amongst those countries, which God foretold by Jeremiah should be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon, Jer. xxv. 21. W. Lowth. It is possible however that the Arabians may be here meant, the Ishmaelites, the tented inhabitants of Arabia Deserta. God might be said to give the country of Moab and Ammon to them, not that they ever subdued it by their arms, but because, when the inhabitants were carried captive beyond the Euphrates, the neighbouring Arabs, charmed with the beauty and the fertility of these provinces, rushed into the country and occupied their seats.

This exposition seems to be confirmed by the latter part of this, and by the following verse, which express clearly the genius and the mode of life of the Arabs. "They shall eat thy fruit, and they shall drink thy milk; and I will make Rabbah a stable for camels, and the Ammonites a couchingplace for flocks." Their food is milk, their riches flocks, and upon camels they transport themselves and their property from place to place. Calmet, Harmer.

—— their palaces] The word may also mean their pens or inclosures for cattle. Harmer. Or, their munitions and fortified camps. Poole.

5. And I will make Rabbah] See chap. xxi. 20. The capital city of the Ammonites.

6. — clapped thine hands, and stamped with the feet,] Gestures sometimes used to express joy and satisfaction, Job xxvii. 23; Lam. ii. 15; Jer. xlviii. 27. W. Lowth. See the note on Job xxvii. 23.

8. — Moab and Seir] Seir is the same with Edom: see chap. xxxv. 2.

—— is like unto all the heathen;] We see no difference betwixt Judah and other nations. God hath no more power to preserve them, than the god of their neighbours. Bp. Hall.

9. — I will open the side of Moab] I will make a passage for his enemies to invade his frontier. W. Lowth.

—— Beth-jeshimoth, Baal-meon, and Kiriathaim,] They were the chief frontier towns of Moab. Calmet.

10. Unto the men of the east with the Ammonites,] That is, together with the Moabites, I will deliver up the Ammonites unto the men of the East; see ver. 4. Moab and Ammon are joined together, Zeph. ii. 8, 9. Nebuchadnezzar subdued both. Abp. Newcome.

12. — Because that Edom hath dealt against the house of Judah] The Idumeans, being the posterity of Esau, bore an ancient grudge against the Jews, on account of their ancestor's losing his right of primogeniture, and the subduing of Edom by David afterwards, 2 Sam. viii. 14. Upon both these accounts they took all opportunities of venting their spite towards the Jewish nation particularly; see 2 Chron. xxviii. 17. The ill will they shewed them in the time of their captivity was very remarkable, as appears by those pathetical words of Ps. cxxxvii. 7, "Remember the children of Edom, O Lord, in the day of Jerusalem, how they said, Down with it, down with it, even to the ground." W. Lowth.

13. — Teman; — Dedan] Noted cities of Idumea. See Jer. xlix. 7, 8.

14. — by the hand of my people Israel:] After the restoration of the Jews, Idumea was subdued by them under the conduct of Judas Maccabeus, 1 Macc. v. 3; 2 Macc. x. 16, 17. And afterwards the high priest Hyrcanus made an entire conquest of the country. Dean Prideaux.

Providence would not permit that they should be punished by other hands than those of the Jews, whom they had treated with so much cruelty. Calmet.

4 And they shall destroy the walls of Tyrus, and break down her towers: I will also scrape her dust from her, and make her like the top of a rock.

15. — Because the Philistines have dealt by revenge,] The Philistines being borderers upon the Jews, were their ancient enemies, from the time of the Judges downward, more particularly in the time of Ahaz: see 2 Chron. xxviii. 18. W. Lowth. Amos accuses them of having sold to the Idumeans the captives which they had taken in Judea; Amos i. 5—8. Calmet.

16. — and I will cut off the Cherethims,] The Cherethims or Cherethites are the same with the Philistines, or a tribe of that people, 1 Sam. xxx. 14; Zeph. ii. 5. W. Lowth.

—— the remnant] The Philistines had been much weakened in preceding wars by the kings of Egypt and of Chaldea; and therefore they are called "the remnant." Calmet. See Jer. xxv. and xlvii.

Chap. XXVI. ver. 1. — in the eleventh year, in the first day of the month,] The eleventh year mentioned here is the very year of the taking of Jerusalem. It was the eleventh year of the reign of Zedekiah, and of the captivity of Jehoiachin. The particular month is not mentioned. W. Lowth.

2. — she is broken that was the gates of the people:] Jerusalem is meant. There was a great confluence of people to Jerusalem from all parts at the solemn feasts of the year, as well of Jews as proselytes, John xii. 20. This, together with the resort for the purposes of trade, contributed to render her populous and wealthy, and on that account an object of envy to the Tyrians. W. Lowth, Calmet, Poole.

Ezekiel here begins his prophecy against the Tyrians with a declaration, that it was occasioned by their insulting over the Jews upon the taking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. The Prophets Joel and Amos had before denounced the Divine judgments upon the Tyrians for their wickedness in general, and in particular for their cruelty to the children of Israel, and for buying and selling them like cattle in the markets, Joel iii. 5, &c.; Amos i. 9. And the Psalmist reckons them among the most inveterate and implacable enemies of the Jewish name and nation, Ps. lxxxiii. 6, 7. Bp. Newton.

—— she is turned unto me:] Her traffick and her wealth are come into my stores. Compare Isai. lx. 5. Bp. Hall.

—— I shall be replenished,] Trading interest will turn to me; they, that carried merchandise to Jerusalem, will now bring it to me. Poole. Besides which, as Tyre was a noted market for all sorts of trade; so when Jerusalem was taken and sacked, the spoil of the city was carried thither for sale; and probably several of the inhabitants, being made captives, were sold there for slaves; a traffick the Tyrians dealt in very much, chap. xxvii. 13. This interpretation may be confirmed by comparing it with Joel iii. 4, 5, 6, where the Prophet upbraids the Tyrians for making merchandise, both of the persons and substance of the Jews, when they came into their hands. To the same purpose we read 1 Mac. iii. 41, that when Lysias came with great forces to subdue the Jews, the merchants of the country took silver and gold, and came into the camp, to buy the children of Israel for slaves. W. Lowth.

3. — I am against thee, O Tyrus,] This prophecy respects the same siege of Tyre which is foretold in the 47th chapter of Jeremiah. The profane authors extant in the time of St. Jerome said nothing of this siege; but the ancient writers of the Phenician history, which had been read by Josephus, related that Nebuchadnezzar had besieged Tyre in the reign of king Ithobal, and that the siege had lasted thirteen years. Berosus and the Phenician history also stated, that the king of Chaldea had subdued Phenicia and Syria: and lastly, Philostratus had spoken of this siege by Nebuchadnezzar. The sole object of this and the two following chapters is the destruction of the city and of the kingdom of Tyre. Calmet.

When we consider the extent and effects of the Phenician commerce, the scanty information concerning it, which we receive from ancient writers, must on a first view appear surprising. But when we recollect that all the Greek historians, Herodotus excepted, who give any account of the Phenicians, published their works long after the destruction of Tyre by Alexander the Great, we shall cease to wonder at their not having entered into minute details with respect to a trade, which was then removed to new seats, and carried on in other channels. But the power and opulence of Tyre, in the prosperous age of its commerce, must have attracted general attention. In this and the two following chapters of Ezekiel, who flourished two hundred and sixty years before the fall of Tyre, there is the most particular account of the nature and variety of its commercial transactions, that is to be found in any ancient writer, and which conveys at the same time a magnificent idea of the extensive power of that state. Dr. Robertson.

—— as the sea &c.] They shall be as loud, as numerous, as irresistible as the waves of the sea. This is one of the most beautiful and expressive images which occur in the magnificent prophecy here recorded. Abp. Newcome.

5. It shall be a place for the spreading of nets] "Passing by Tyre from curiosity only, I came to be a mournful witness of the truth of that prophecy, 'that Tyre the queen of nations should be a rock for fishers to dry their nets on:' two wretched fishermen with miserable nets had just given over their occupation." Bruce.

much as one entire house left. Its present inhabitants are only a few wretches harbouring themselves in the vaults, and subsisting themselves chiefly upon fishing, who seem to be preserved in this place by Divine Providence, as a visible argument how God has fulfilled His word concerning Tyre." Maundrell.

The Jesuit Hadrianus Parvillerias resided ten years in Syria; and Huetius heard him say, that when he approached the ruins of Tyre, and beheld the rocks stretched forth to the sea, and the great stones scattered up and down on the shore, made clean and smooth by the sun, waves, and winds, and useful only for the drying of fishermen's nets, many of which happened at the time to be spread on them, it brought to his memory this prophecy. Bp. Newton.

6. — her daughters which are in the field] By the daughters of Tyre are meant, the lesser towns which were under her jurisdiction as the mother city or seat of the kingdom. W. Lowth.

7. — Behold, I will bring upon Tyrus Nebuchadrezzar &c.] The Prophet in this place expressly declares, that the city should be taken and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon. Shalmaneser king of Assyria had besieged Tyre, but without success; the Tyrians had with a few ships beaten his large fleet: but yet Nebuchadnezzar should prevail. Ezekiel not only foretold the siege, but mentioned it afterwards as a past transaction. See chap. xxix. 18. Bp. Newton.

It hath been questioned among learned men, which of the Tyres was the subject of these prophecies; whether Old Tyre, that was seated on the continent, or New Tyre, that was built in an island almost over against it. The truest and best answer I conceive to be, that the prophecies appertain to both, some expressions being applicable only to the former, and others only to the latter. Compare chap. xxvii. 3, with ver. 4. and 25; xxvi. 7, &c. with Isai. xxiii. 2, 4, 6; and chap. xxvi. 10, with ver. 12, and xxviii. 8. From these passages it appears that the insular Tyre, as well as the Tyre upon the continent, is included in these prophecies: they are both comprehended under the same name, and both spoken of as one and the same city, part built on the continent, and part on an island adjoining. It is commonly said indeed, that when Old Tyre was closely besieged, and was near falling into the hands of the Chaldeans, then the Tyrians fled from thence, and built New Tyre in the island: but the learned Vitringa hath proved at large, that New Tyre was founded several ages before, and was the station for ships, and considered as part of Old Tyre: and Pliny, speaking of the compass of the city, reckons both the old and the new together. Bp. Newton.

8. — and lift up the buckler] In forming the testudo. Michaelis. In the practice of this manœuvre the men approached towards the wall with their bucklers lifted above their heads, and so closely pressed together as to form a shield impenetrable to the darts of the besieged. Calmet.

9. — and with his axes] Any instrument used in demolishing buildings. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

10—12. — their dust shall cover thee: &c.] A lively description of the tumult and desolation that attends a conquering army making themselves masters of a great city; compare Nahum ii. 3, 4, 9; iii. 2, 3. W. Lowth.

12. — thy stones and thy timber and thy dust in the midst of the water.] The sea shall overflow thy ruins; see ver. 19. W. Lowth.

14. — be built no more:] This is true of Old Tyre; it has been built no more: New Tyre, taken by Alexander, was built upon an island: Nebuchadnezzar quite destroyed Old Tyre, and the ruins were made use of by Alexander to effect the destruction of New Tyre.

The prophecy was also fulfilled upon New Tyre, whose inhabitants were quite destroyed by Alexander when he took the city, and afterwards the city itself became desolate. W. Lowth.

15. — Shall not the isles shake] Shall not all the sea coasts round about be afraid and amazed at thy destruction? Bp. Hall. See the note from Vitringa, on Isai. xi. 11.

16, 17. Then all the princes of the sea &c.] All the princes and rich merchants of Sidon, Carthage, and other maritime cities, that maintained a trade with Tyre, and got great wealth by that means; they whose "merchants are princes," as Isaiah speaks of the merchants of Tyre, chap. xxiii. 8; they shall express a deep sense and concern for her misfortunes; compare chap. xxvii. 30—32; xxxii. 10. *W. 17. — strong in the sea,] Tyre is called "the strength of the sea," Isai. xxiii. 4; being strong both by its situation and the strength of its naval forces, upon which account it was formidable to all who had any trading upon the sea. W. Lowth.

18. Now shall the isles tremble] Ver. 15. St. Jerome translates it, "Now shall the ships tremble," that is, all seafaring men; see chap. xxvii. 29, 30; Isai. xxiii. 14. W. Lowth.

—— at thy departure.] Into captivity. W. Lowth, Chaldee Paraphrase. At thy forsaking of the city and flying in ships. Houbigant. See Bp. Lowth on Isai. xxiii. 1.

The Tyrians having planted colonies at Tarshish and upon the coasts of Chittim, it was natural for them, when pressed with dangers and difficulties at home, to fly to their friends and countrymen abroad for refuge and protection. That they really did so, St. Jerome asserts upon the authority of Assyrian histories, now lost and perished. Bp. Newton.

19. — when I shall bring up the deep upon thee, &c.] This may mean literally, that the sea should come up and cover the ruins of the city; see ver. 12. W. Lowth. Or, that the Babylonians should break in like a deluge upon the city, and swallow it up. Bp. Hall. Jeremiah compares the army of the king of Egypt to a flood; see Jer. xlvi. 7.

20. — with them that descend into the pit, &c.] Into the place of departed souls, as our Saviour speaks concerning Capernaum, Luke x. 15; compare Isai. xiv. 11, 15; Ezek. xxxii. 18, 24; and brought to utter desolation like cities, which have been long ago buried in oblivion. W. Lowth.

—— though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again,] Compare ver. 14, and note. The expression denotes utter destruction, Ps. xxxvii. 36. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXVII. ver. 2. — take up a lamentation] This alludes to the mournful ditties used at funerals, wherein the mourning women recounted every thing that was valuable or praiseworthy belonging to the deceased, and then lamented his loss, Jer. ix. 17, 18. In like manner those that traded with Tyre should mourn over her and lament the loss of her riches and greatness; compare chap. xxvi. 16, 17; and see ver. 32. of this chapter. W. Lowth.

3. — at the entry of the sea,] A seaport commodiously situated for the commerce of the Mediterranean. Calmet.

—— which art a merchant of the people] Tyre is called by Isaiah "a mart of nations," chap. xxiii. 3. Ezekiel, as it were commenting upon those words of Isaiah, recounts in this chapter the various nations, whose commodities were brought to Tyre, and were bought and sold by the Tyrians. *Bp. to their ships. Suetonius, in his Life of Caligula, reckons this among several instances of that emperour's extravagance, that he furnished his pleasure boats with costly sails, and other expensive ornaments. Bishop Newton compares this luxury in the Tyrian shipping with the elegance and magnificence of Cleopatra's galley, when she sailed down the river Cydnus to meet Antony. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome. Maillet says of Egypt, "there is still a considerable quantity of cloth made here, but it is far short of the perfection of that which was formerly brought from Egypt." Hasselquist is of a different opinion: "By what we can see of the linen wrapped round the mummies, the famous linen of the Egyptians was no better than what is made at present in this country; it is however softer and of a looser texture, for which reason it lasts longer, and does not wear out so soon as ours." Now as the persons embalmed were of great distinction, it is probable that the linen, in which the mummies were wrapped, was the finest at that time in Egypt; but if it was so coarse, why is it represented in this passage of Ezekiel as such a piece of magnificence for the ships of Tyre to have their sails of the linen of Egypt? Certainly, because though coarse in our eyes, it was thought to be very valuable when used even for clothing; and if matting was then commonly used for sails, as appears from Niebuhr to be the case at present on the Red sea, sails of linen must have been extremely magnificent. Harmer.

—— blue and purple from the isles of Elishah] Blue and purple are elsewhere reckoned among those colours which set off the richest attire; see Exod. xxv. 4; Jer. x. 9. They were brought from the islands of the Egean sea, particularly Coos, famed for purple among heathen authors. Elishah denotes the countries upon the coast of Greece; a part of Peloponnesus retains the name of Elis. W. Lowth. Bochart explains "Elishah" of Peloponnesus; and Michaelis remarks the resemblance of the name to Hellenes, who are said by Herodotus to have settled in the Peloponnesus. Abp. Newcome.

—— which covered thee.] Perhaps the awning placed over the ship. Harmer. St. Jerome suggests, that it might have been the dress of the pilots and the rowers. Calmet.

8. — Arvad] The island Aradus at the mouth of the river Eleutherus, on the coast of Phenicia, opposite to Tyre. The Arvadite is mentioned, Gen. x. 18. It is also called Arpad or Arphad, 2 Kings xviii. 34; Isai. x. 9; Jer. xlix. 23. W. Lowth. The Tyrians were so opulent, that they employed the inhabitants of other cities in the servile office of rowers and mariners. Calmet.

—— Tubal, and Meshech,] Sons of Japhet, Gen. x. 2. The people called Tibareni and Moschi are here meant, who are generally mentioned together, and were situated towards mount Caucasus and the Euxine sea. Bochart, Michaelis.

—— they traded the persons of men] Sellers of men for slaves are branded by St. Paul as highly criminal, 1 Tim. i. 10. Thessaly abounded with them. Bochart observes, that Pontus, to which the Tibareni extended themselves, was remarkable for slaves; and that the Grecian slaves were the most valuable of any. Abp. Newcome.

—— vessels of brass] Mines of copper are worked in Caucasus to this day; and a village called Kubescha, on that mountain, is celebrated for the elegance of its brasen vessels. Michaelis.

14. — Togarmah] By "Togarmah" Bochart understands Cappadocia. The Septuagint reads "Thorgama," Gen. x. 3; which comes near in sound to Trogma or Trocma, a part of Cappadocia. W. Lowth.

15. — Dedan] A city in the Persian gulph, now called Dadan. Bochart, Michaelis. To this place the inhabitants of the Eastern isles or seacoasts brought their wares. Abp. Newcome.

The Dedan here spoken of was derived from that Dedan mentioned Gen. x. 7, the son of Raamah or Regma. W. Lowth.

—— cassia, and calamus,] These articles being aromatick gums, confirm Bochart's interpretation in the note above; they are known not to grow in Greece but in Arabia. W. Lowth.

20. Dedan] This is probably to be understood of the posterity of that Dedan, who was Abraham's grandson; see chap. xxv. 13. W. Lowth.

—— in precious clothes] In the margin, "clothes of freedom:" literally, "clothes of stripping off for riding:" it seems to mean such clothes as were used in riding, and occasionally stripped off the horse or other beast; that is, a kind of horsecloths, on which the ancients used to ride, before the invention of saddles with stirrups, which were not known till long after: in one word, housings. Parkhurst.

22. — Raamah,] Raamah was son of Cush, and father of Sheba. According to Bochart, Raamah is a city of Arabia on the Persian gulph.

23. Haran,] See Gen. xi. 31.

—— Canneh, and Eden,] Supposed by some to be ports in Arabia Felix. W Lowth.

24. — bound with cords, and made of cedar,] Carefully packed up in chests of cedar, to give these clothes a fine scent, and to preserve them from decay. W. Lowth.

25. The ships of Tarshish did sing of thee] Ships of Tarshish signify sometimes in Scripture any trading or merchant ships; see Isai. ii. 16. W. Lowth, Calmet. The Prophet, having reckoned up the principal countries which traded with Tyre, now adds, in comprehensive terms, that all merchant adventurers sung or spake great things of her riches; or as the word may be rendered, "they ruled or governed in thy markets." W. Lowth.

26. — into great waters:] Under these beautiful and expressive figures Tyre is represented as brought into danger by her statesmen, and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar; see the like comparison Isai. xxxiii. 23. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth. The Prophet is here speaking of Tyre under the image of a ship. Bp. Warburton.

29. — upon the land;] The shore of the adjoining island, from which they viewed the conflagration of their city. Abp. Newcome.

30. — against thee,] Over thee; as persons mourn over the dead or the unfortunate; Septuagint and Vulgate. W. Lowth.

—— and shall cast up dust &c.] See 1 Sam. iv. 12; Job ii. 12.

588. THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, say unto the prince of Tyrus, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a god, I sit in the seat of God, in the † midst of the seas; [a] yet thou art a man, and not God, though thou set thine heart as the heart of God:

3 Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel; there is no secret that they can hide from thee:

Before CHRIST 588.

4 With thy wisdom and with thine understanding thou hast gotten thee riches, and hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures:

5 † By thy great wisdom and by thy traffick hast thou increased thy riches, and thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches:

† Heb. By the greatness of thy wisdom.

6 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God;

7 Behold, therefore I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations: and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness.

8 They shall bring thee down to the pit, and thou shalt die the deaths of them that are slain in the midst of the seas.

9 Wilt thou yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God? but thou shalt be a man, and no God, in the hand of him that ‖ slayeth thee.

10 Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised by the hand of strangers: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord GOD.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

34. In the time when thou shalt be broken] In the time when thou shalt be destroyed by the Babylonian forces, which like a raging sea shall come in upon thee; thy trade, and all the commerce that thou hadst with other nations, shall utterly fail. Bp. Hall.

36. — shall hiss at thee;] By way of insult and derision; see 1 Kings ix. 8; as men are apt to despise those in adversity, whom they courted and respected in prosperity. The Chaldee Paraphrase renders it, "they shall be astonished;" and this sense agrees better with the lamentations of the seafaring men, mentioned in the foregoing verses. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXVIII. ver. 2. — the prince of Tyrus,] His name was Ithobal; as appears from the Phenician annals extracted from Josephus. Calmet, Abp. Newcome.

—— though thou set thine heart as the heart of God:] Though thou hast in thy proud thoughts equalled thyself with God. Bp. Hall.

Ezekiel here censures the pride of the king of Tyre, as he had before condemned the people for their insolence. For these and their other vices, more especially for their insults and injuries against the Jews, chap. xxvi. 2, the Prophets prophesied against them; see Isai. xxiii. 9. Bp. Newton.

3. Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel;] In thy own conceit. Bp. Hall. The fame of Daniel's wisdom was quickly spread over Chaldea upon his being advanced to several posts of honour and dignity by Nebuchadnezzar; see Dan. ii. 48. The Phenicians, of whom the Tyrians were a colony, valued themselves for their wisdom and ingenuity, as being the inventors of navigation, of letters, and sciences; compare Zech. ix. 2. W. Lowth.

8. — of them that are slain in the midst of the seas.] And thou, that hast fondly imagined thyself a god, shall die the death of thine ordinary vassals, notwithstanding thy strong forts and bulwarks of the sea. Bp. Hall.

9. Wilt thou yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God?] A keen taunt or sarcasm. What will become of thy divinity then? Wilt thou then dream of immortality and almighty power, when thine enemy is killing thee? Appear then to thyself and others to be a mortal, weak, conquered man, who dieth a sacrifice to the conqueror's pride and cruelty. Poole.

10. — of the uncircumcised] Circumcision being the rite which distinguished God's people from the heathen, "uncircumcised" is equivalent in sense to "wicked or profane." W. Lowth. So the Greeks gave other nations the contemptuous name of "Barbarians;" see 1 Sam. xvii. 36. Abp. Newcome.

12. — Thou sealest up the sum, &c.] In thine own opinion thou art the perfect pattern of wisdom and all other excellencies. The expression is taken from vessels and other repositories, which when full were sealed in order to preserve their contents. See Deut. xxxii. 32; Job xiv. 17. W. Lowth.

13. Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God;] Thou abounded-edst in all delicacies, as if thou hadst lived in paradise. Bp. Hall.

16 By the multitude of thy merchandise they have filled the midst of thee with violence, and thou hast sinned: therefore I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God: and I will destroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire.

17 Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty, thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness: I will cast thee to the ground, I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee.

18 Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries by the multitude of thine iniquities, by the iniquity of thy traffick; therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midst of thee, it shall devour thee, and I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth in the sight of all them that behold thee.

23 For I will send into her pestilence, and blood into her streets; and the wounded shall be judged in the midst of her by the sword upon her on every side; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

24 ¶ And there shall be no more a pricking brier unto the house of Israel, nor any grieving thorn of all that are round about them, that despised them; and they shall know that I am the Lord GOD.

25 Thus saith the Lord GOD; When I

This expression, as well as the whole context, alludes to the complete happiness which Adam enjoyed in paradise before his apostasy and fearful fall. W. Lowth.

—— every precious stone was thy covering,] In the canopy of thy throne; or, thy garments have been adorned with them. Abp. Newcome.

—— the workmanship of thy tabrets — was prepared in thee] The Prophet here notices the enjoyments of the Tyrians, their musick and songs, on instruments of the most exquisite workmanship: with allusion probably either to those solemnities, with which the birth of princes is celebrated, or to those which accompany the coronation of a king, and his investiture with the royal dignity. Poole.

14. Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth;] The particle of similitude "like" is understood; the two cherubim of beaten gold were part of the ark, and therefore anointed, Exod. xxv. 18, 21; xxx. 26; the two cherubim covered the mercy seat with their wings. In this lamentation, wisdom, beauty, magnificence, splendour and perfection are attributed to the king of Tyre; he likewise bore an exalted and sacred office: on these accounts he is compared to one of the angelick orders. Abp. Newcome.

—— thou wast upon the holy mountain of God; &c.] The image of the cherub is pursued; such was thy eminent distinction, that thou wast, as it were, placed in the temple of God in His holy mountain. Thou wast, as it were, conversant among the twelve precious stones on the breastplate of the high priest, which shone like fire. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome. Whenever God, who dwelt between the cherubim, was approached, the high priest wore his breastplate, Exod. xxviii. 30; 1 Sam. xxviii. 6. Abp. Newcome. Thinking himself more than mortal, is expressed by being as Adam was in paradise, and as the cherubim were in a place not to be approached. Abp. Secker. Tertullian paraphrases the latter part of the verse thus: "Thou hadst thy abode among glittering stars," as the angels are sometimes called; see Job xxxviii. 7; Isai. xiv. 13. W. Lowth.

16. By the multitude of thy merchandise &c.] By the confluence of much people upon the occasions of thy merchandise, and the oppressive bargains that are used therein, thou art full of fraud, and violence, and art thereupon grown exceedingly sinful; therefore will I cast thee out from those vainly pretended rights which thou claimest in the temple of God: I will destroy thee, O thou false cherub, from the ark whose covering thou wouldest resemble, and strike thee down from those clouds where thou affectest to walk among the fiery meteors. Bp. Hall.

17. — by reason of thy brightness:] That height of glory to which I had advanced thee has perverted thy judgment, and made thee abuse thy wisdom to craft and deceit. W. Lowth.

—— I will lay thee before kings,] I will make thee a spectacle and a warning or object of contempt to other princes. W. Lowth, Poole.

18. Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries] By the multitude of thine iniquities, thou hast defiled those places of majesty and devotion which thou wouldest have to be thought sacred. Bp. Hall, Calmet. Or, the word translated "sanctuaries" may mean palaces, stately buildings. W. Lowth.

21. — against Zidon,] Zidon was the mother city of Tyre; and possessed for a long time the empire of Phenicia, and of the sea. Afterwards Tyre became more powerful than the mother country, and obtained the sovereignty, both of Zidon and the other cities of Phenicia. We learn from Josephus, that Zidon revolted from Tyre, and submitted herself to Shalmaneser. They were however generally partakers of the same fate in prosperity and adversity, and the destruction of Zidon followed close upon that of Tyre. Calmet, W. Lowth.

24. And there shall be no more a pricking brier unto the house of Israel, &c.] I will put an end to the sorrows of My Church; these heathens shall no more gall and grieve them; neither shall the nations round about insult upon their miseries, and trample upon them. Bp. Hall.

25. — When I shall have gathered &c.] These expressions refer

Before CHRIST 588. shall have gathered the house of Israel from the people among whom they are scattered, and shall be sanctified in them in the sight of the heathen, then shall they dwell in their land that I have given to my servant Jacob.

‖ Or, with confidence. 26 And they shall dwell ‖ safely therein, and shall build houses, and plant vineyards; yea, they shall dwell with confidence, when I have executed judgments ‖ Or, spoil. upon all those that ‖ despise them round about them; and they shall know that I am the LORD their God.

CHAP. XXIX.

1 The judgment of Pharaoh for his treachery to Israel. 8 The desolation of Egypt. 13 The restoration thereof after forty years. 17 Egypt the reward of Nebuchadrezzar. 21 Israel shall be restored.

589. IN the tenth year, in the tenth month, in the twelfth day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophesy against him, and against all Egypt:

3 Speak, and say, Thus saith the Lord [a] Ps. 74. 13, 14. Isai. 27. 1. & 51. 9. GOD; Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great [a] dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself. Before CHRIST 589.

4 But I will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales, and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales.

5 And I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers: thou shalt fall upon the † open † Heb. face of the field. fields; thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered: I have given thee for meat to the beasts of the field and to the fowls of the heaven.

6 And all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am the LORD, because they have been a [b] staff of reed to the house of Israel. [b] 2 Kings 18. 21. Isai. 36. 6.

7 When they took hold of thee by thy hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder: and when they leaned upon thee, thou brakest, and madest all their loins to be at a stand.

8 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee.

to the times of the Gospel, and are to be understood in a spiritual sense. Junius. Or, if we follow the literal sense of the words, it is a plain prophecy, either of the comparative safety and happiness which the Jews enjoyed after the seventy years' captivity; (Poole;) or, of the general restoration of the Jews, and their future return into their own land; as will appear by comparing the words with the parallel texts of this Prophet, namely, chap. xi. 17; xx. 38, 41; xxxiv. 13; xxxvi. 24; xxxvii. 12, 14, 21, 25; xxxix. 27. Compare Isai. lxv. 9, 10; Jer. xxx. 18; xxxii. 41; in which prediction most of the other Prophets agree with him. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXIX. ver. 1. In the tenth year, in the tenth month, &c.] This and the three following chapters are joined together, because they treat of the same subject; though they consist of prophecies uttered at very different periods of time. The period assigned at the head of this chapter is during the siege of Jerusalem, and, agreeably to ver. 6, 7, may be immediately after Pharaoh's retreat, foretold by Jeremiah, chap. xxxvii. 7. Abp. Newcome.

2. — against Pharaoh] Pharaoh being a common name to all the kings of Egypt, this prince was called Pharaoh-hophra by Jeremiah, chap. xliv. 30; and Apries by Herodotus. W. Lowth.

3. — the great dragon] The crocodile is alluded to. Bochart remarks, that the word Pharaoh signifies a crocodile in the Arabick tongue. Among the ancients it was a symbol of Egypt, and appears so in Roman coins. W. Lowth, Michaelis.

—— that lieth in the midst of his rivers,] Memphis is thought to have been the residence of the ancient kings of Egypt. There were large lakes to the north and west of Memphis, which made the strength of the place surprising; and Dr. Pococke saw some near Aletrahenny, which he supposes were these very lakes. Nothing then could be more natural than these words of Ezekiel. Harmer. The expression however is to be understood figuratively: and, as Pharaoh is intended by the "great dragon," so the power, riches, and forces of his kingdom are denoted by "his rivers:" as it follows, "My river is mine own," that is, all the strength and glory of Egypt are mine. Poole.

—— I have made it for myself.] This vaunting language agrees with what Herodotus relates of Pharaoh-hophra, (see Jer. xliv. 30,) or Apries. This is said to have been the persuasion of Apries, that no God was able to deprive him of his kingdom. Grotius, Abp. Newcome.

4. But I will put hooks in thy jaws, &c.] But I will put the hooks of the king of Babylon into thy jaws, and will drag thee out of those watery forts of thine to the dry land; and for thy princes and people, which are as the lesser sort of fishes, they also, as sticking to thy scales, shall be plucked out with thee. Bp. Hall. This prophecy may also relate to the unsuccessful expedition of Apries against the Cyrenians. W. Lowth. To the mutiny of his own people, and to his defeat by Amasis. Abp. Newcome.

5. — thrown into the wilderness,] This seems to be a plainer allusion to the heavy loss which Apries and his Egyptian army sustained amongst the deserts of Libya and Cyrene. Apries did not perish there, he was strangled afterwards in his palace. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth. Thrown upon the shore. Calmet.

6. — a staff of reed] A deceitful and untrusty stay to the house of Israel. Canes or reeds abounded on the banks of the Nile. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

7. When they took hold of thee by thy hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder:] Or their arm. The sharp fragment pierced the arm that leaned on it. The king, who was Zedekiah's confederate, came with a great army to raise the siege of Jerusalem; but durst not venture a battle with the Chaldeans, and in a little time returned into his own country, deserting Zedekiah, whom he had engaged to rebel against Nebuchadnezzar; whereby they became the occasion of his own and his people's ruin, chap. xvii. 15; Jer. xxxvii. 5, 7. W. Lowth.

—— and madest all their loins to be at a stand.] Or, "and didst strain all their loins." Abp. Newcome.

8. — a sword] This may be understood of Nebuchadnezzar, who, taking advantage of Amasis' revolt, overran that country, and made a prey of the whole kingdom. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST 589.

[c] Isai. 19. 23. Jer. 46. 26.

16 And it shall be no more the confidence of the house of Israel, which bringeth their iniquity to remembrance, when they shall look after them: but they shall know that I am the Lord GOD.

17 ¶ And it came to pass in the seven and twentieth year, in the first month, in the first day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 572.

18 Son of man, Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus: every head was made bald, and every shoulder was peeled: yet had he no wages, nor his army, for Tyrus, for the service that he had served against it:

10. —from the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia.] From the south borders of Egypt unto the north, shall the land be desolate. Bp. Hall. Others prefer the translation, "from Migdol to Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia." Compare chap. xxx. 5, 9. Migdol, or Magdolus, was a town near the Red sea, as appears from Exod. xiv. 2; Numb. xxxiii. 7. It lay therefore towards the north, at the entrance of Egypt from Palestine. And Syene was to the south of Egypt, under the tropick of Cancer, and bordering upon African Ethiopia." Dean Prideaux, W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

11. — neither shall it be inhabited forty years.] After the total defeat of Apries by the Cyrenians, in which so many Egyptians fell, that the whole nation was enraged against their king, a civil war with Amasis followed; after that a conquest and a desolation of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar, and another conquest of it by Cyrus. We learn from this passage, during what period of years Egypt was laid waste, and in a manner deserted. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth. Amasis reigned forty-four years according to Herodotus. The forty years of desolation must have ended in the time of Cyrus, who probably permitted the Egyptian captives to return. Calmet.

12. — I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations,] Some of them shall flee for refuge into foreign countries, and some shall be carried captive by the Babylonians. Compare Jer. xlvi. 19. W. Lowth.

We cannot prove from heathen authors that this desolation of the country continued exactly forty years, though it is likely enough that this, as well as the other conquered countries, did not shake off the Babylonian yoke till the time of Cyrus: but we are assured by Berosus, that Nebuchadnezzar took several captives in Egypt, and carried them to Babylon; and from Megasthenes we learn, that he transplanted and settled others in Pontus. So true it is that they were "scattered among the nations, and dispersed through the countries;" and might, upon the dissolution of the Babylonian empire, return to their native country. Bp. Newton.

14. — into the land of Pathros,] That part of Egypt which is called Thebais, as Bochart proves by several arguments. W. Lowth.

15. It shall be the basest of the kingdoms;] And, as it follows in the next chapter, "there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt," ver. 13. It is now a great deal above two thousand years since this prophecy was first delivered: and what likelihood or appearance was there, that the Egyptians should for so many ages bow under a foreign yoke, and never in all that time be able to recover their liberties, and have a prince of their own to reign over them? Bp. Newton. In Egypt the human mind had made some of its earliest and most auspicious efforts. It was long the general opinion, that there the laws of society had been discovered, and the fountains of science opened. Unquestionably that ingenious people were very early distinguished by an ardent spirit of enterprise, and a peculiar happiness of invention. The stupendous monuments of art, which lie scattered over the banks of the Nile, attest the vastness of their designs, and the extent of their power. The earliest professors of literature, and the first founders of civil polity, in Europe, and in the more western provinces of Asia, travelled into Egypt, and there acquired a knowledge of the fundamental principles of science and government. Egypt was possessed likewise of natural advantages, which could seldom fail. Its situation was singularly calculated to defend it against the attacks of foreign invaders: whilst its uncommon fruitfulness promised to secure the country, which it enriched, from poverty, baseness, and subjection. Yet after a long course of grandeur, and in contradiction to its natural advantages, Ezekiel pronounced that "the kingdom should be the basest of kingdoms," and that "there should be no more a prince of the land of Egypt." Richards. As is the prophecy, so is the event. For not long afterwards Egypt was conquered by the Babylonians; and after the Babylonians, by the Persians; and after the Persians, it became subject to the Macedonians; and after the Macedonians, to the Romans; and after the Romans, to the Saracens; and then to the Mamalucks; and is now a province of the Ottoman empire. Bp. Newton.

16. — which bringeth their iniquity to remembrance,] Causing God to punish the iniquity of His people. Abp. Newcome. God never forgets; but when He visits, punishes, and judges a nation for their sin, then their sin is said to come up into remembrance. Poole.

17. — in the seven and twentieth year,] See the note on ver. 1.

18. — to serve a great service] The siege lasted thirteen years. The heads of the soldiers were made bald by the helmet, by disease, and by labour: and their shoulders galled by carrying earth to raise mounts and fortifications against it. W. Lowth, Bp. Hall.

—— yet had he no wages, nor his army,] This was literally true: for when the Tyrians saw that the works for carrying on the siege were perfected, and the foundations of the walls were

9 In that day shall messengers go forth from me in ships to make the careless Ethiopians afraid, and great pain shall come upon them, as in the day of Egypt: for, lo, it cometh.

10 Thus saith the Lord GOD; I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease by the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon.

11 He and his people with him, the terrible of the nations, shall be brought to destroy the land: and they shall draw their swords against Egypt, and fill the land with the slain.

shaken by the battering of the rams, whatsoever precious things in gold, silver, clothes, and various kinds of furniture, the nobility had, they put them on board their ships, and carried them to the islands; so that the city being taken, Nebuchadnezzar found nothing worthy of his labour. Bp. Newton.

20. — because they wrought for me,] The destruction of cities and countries is a work of God's providence, for the effecting of which He makes use of kings and princes as His instruments. Upon this account He calls Nebuchadnezzar His servant, Jer. xxv. 9, because "he wrought for Him," as it is here expressed; that is, executed His judgments upon Tyre, and the other cities and countries which God delivered into his hand. W. Lowth.

21. — the horn of the house of Israel to bud forth,] The enlargement of Jehoiakim may be referred to. See 2 Kings xxv. 27. Or, Zerubbabel, who was born at Babylon, of the house of David. Daniel was also advanced to authority, Dan. ii. 48, 49. These marks of favour bestowed upon the Jews were preludes to their general restoration. Whatever event is foretold, Ezekiel lived to be animated by it in his prophetical office, as appears from the following clause. Abp. Newcome, Calmet.

—— the opening of the mouth] When thy prophecies are made good by the event, this shall add a new authority to what thou speakest. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXX. ver. 2. — howl ye,] The Egyptians are addressed. W. Lowth.

—— Woe worth the day!] "To worth," or "wurth," is a Saxon verb, signifying to be. It is now only retained in "woe worth," that is, woe be, a denunciation, or exclamation of sorrow. Dr. Johnson. Unhappy be! or, Woe be to! Tyrwhitt.

3. — the day is near,] The day when the Lord will take vengeance of the heathen, who have oppressed His people. Bp. Hall.

5. Ethiopia, and Libya, and Lydia,] The names in the Hebrew are "Cush, Phut, and Lud," who are mentioned together as the Egyptian allies, Jer. xlvi. 9. Cush probably signifies Ethiopia here, (see chap. xxix. 10,) as being joined with Phut and Lud, who were people of Africa. See the note on chap. xxvii. 10. W. Lowth.

8. — a fire in Egypt,] God's judgments are often compared to fire. W. Lowth.

9. — in ships] Up the Nile to Ethiopia, it being a more secure way of conveying intelligence in a time of general commotion. Abp. Newcome. St. Jerome informs us, that vessels navigated the Nile as far as the cataracts at Syene, on the borders of Ethiopia. Calmet.

Egypt depended entirely upon the overflowing of the Nile. Abp. Newcome.

13. —out of Noph;] Noph, or Memphis, was one of the principal cities of Egypt, a seat of their kings, where their sepulchres stood. On this account it is frequently mentioned in Scripture. See Isai. xix. 13; Jer. ii. 16; xliv. 1. In Hosea it is called "Moph," (chap. ix. 6,) which comes near in sound to Memphis. W. Lowth. Cairo is called to this day "Menoph." Abp. Newcome.

——the yokes] The yokes imposed by the Egyptians. W. Lowth.

22. —and will break his arms, the strong, and that which was broken; &c.] The king of Babylon had before dispossessed the king of Egypt of all his new conquests, from the river of Egypt to the river Euphrates, 2 Kings xxiv. 7. So that this part of his strength was already taken away, never to be recovered; and now God threatens to destroy the remainder of his power, the kingdom of Egypt itself. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXXI. ver. 2. —Whom art thou like] Thou pridest thyself as if there never was any prince or king that could compare with thee. W. Lowth.

3. Behold, the Assyrian] The Assyrian empire, which was destroyed by Nabopolassar king of Babylon.

The fitness and beauty of this fine image may be learnt from the account of the cedars of Libanus, given by different authors. See note at 1 Kings v. 6.

The prophetick and poetical writers among the Jews make use of the cedar of Lebanon in a figurative sense to express something proud, of high stature, and magnificence, as in this place. This

5 Therefore his height was exalted above all the trees of the field, and his boughs were multiplied, and his branches became long because of the multitude of waters, ‖ when he shot forth.

‖ Or, when it sent them forth.

6 All the [a] fowls of heaven made their nests in his boughs, and under his branches did all the beasts of the field bring forth their young, and under his shadow dwelt all great nations.

[a] Dan. 4. 12.

7 Thus was he fair in his greatness, in the length of his branches: for his root was by great waters.

8 The cedars in the [b] garden of God could not hide him: the fir trees were not like his boughs, and the chesnut trees were not like his branches; nor any tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty.

[b] Gen. 2. 8.

9 I have made him fair by the multitude of his branches: so that all the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, envied him.

10 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; Because thou hast lifted up thyself in height, and he hath shot up his top among the thick boughs, and his heart is lifted up in his height;

12 And strangers, the terrible of the nations, have cut him off, and have left him: upon the mountains and in all the valleys his branches are fallen, and his boughs are broken by all the rivers of the land; and all the people of the earth are gone down from his shadow, and have left him.

13 Upon his ruin shall all the fowls of the heaven remain, and all the beasts of the field shall be upon his branches:

14 To the end that none of all the trees by the waters exalt themselves for their height, neither shoot up their top among the thick boughs, neither their trees ‖ stand up in their height, all that drink water: for they are all delivered unto death, to the nether parts of the earth, in the midst of the children of men, with them that go down to the pit.

beautiful tree, remarkable for its loftiness, and in the most flourishing condition, but afterwards cut down and deserted, gives us a lively painting of the glory and the catastrophe of the Assyrian monarch. The manner, in which the Prophet has embellished his description, is full of propriety and elegance, and the colouring is such as fills the mind with the greatest delight. Bp. Lowth.

4. The waters made him great,] As trees flourish by a river side, (compare chap. xvii. 5,) so the traffick of the several branches of the river Tigris, upon which Nineveh was situated, made that city and kingdom rich and populous, and she imparted her wealth and stores among the neighbouring provinces. See Nahum ii. 6. W. Lowth.

—— little rivers] Small artificial channels, through which water was distributed in Eastern gardens. According to St. Jerome, the rivers represent the tributary kings of Assyria, and the little rivers its princes and governours, to whom the royal authority was communicated. Calmet.

6. All the fowls of heaven made their nests in his boughs,] Representing the several nations which applied to the Assyrians for protection and safety, chap. xvii. 23; Dan. iv. 12. W. Lowth.

8. The cedars in the garden of God could not hide him: &c.] See Ps. lxxx. 10. Such fair cedars as might be supposed to grow in paradise. W. Lowth. Implying, that the greatest princes in the most flourishing kingdoms of the world could not stand in comparison with the Assyrian monarch; but all of them were forced to yield to him as more powerful and glorious than themselves. Bp. Hall.

9. —all the trees of Eden,—envied him.] "All the kings of the East envied him his greatness," as the Chaldee Paraphrase expresseth the sense. W. Lowth.

11. —the mighty one of the heathen;] Or, "of the nations," as the same word is rendered in the next verse. Nabopolassar king of Babylon, who with Cyaxares destroyed the kingdom of Assyria: see ver. 3, and note. W. Lowth.

12. —have cut him off, and have left him:] Without life or strength, like a tree that is cut down, dried up, and withered. W. Lowth.

13. Upon his ruin &c.] As the birds sit upon the boughs of a tree cut down, and the beasts browse upon its branches, so his dominions shall be a prey to the conquerors; or his armies that are slain shall become meat to the birds and beasts. W. Lowth.

14. To the end &c.] To the end that none of the proud princes of the earth should hereafter dare to exalt themselves in the overweening confidence of their own strength and glory. Bp. Hall.

——all that drink water:] A figurative expression for trees, which derive so much nourishment from water. Abp. Newcome.

——for they are all delivered unto death,] Whatever distinction there is between them and the inferiour sort, death shall make them all equal, Ps. lxxxii. 7. This is more particularly intimated to Egypt, and to those other countries against which God had denounced His judgments: the same fate is here allotted to them which the Assyrian monarch had undergone. W. Lowth.

15. — In the day when he went down to the grave] This and the following verse form a noble and elegant description of that consternation which seized the king of Assyria's allies at the suddenness of his downfal: the same metaphor being still pursued. W. Lowth.

——I covered the deep for him,] I caused the deep to mourn; or, I caused it to cover itself in token of grief. Grotius. The deep that nourished this fair tree (ver. 4.) is described as mourning at his downfal. W. Lowth.

17 They also went down into hell with him unto them that be slain with the sword; and they that were his arm, that dwelt under his shadow in the midst of the heathen.

18 ¶ To whom art thou thus like in glory and in greatness among the trees of Eden? yet shalt thou be brought down with the trees of Eden unto the nether parts of the earth: thou shalt lie in the midst of the uncircumcised with them that be slain by the sword. This is Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord GOD.

—— all the trees of Eden, — shall be comforted] The deceased princes, his allies and tributaries, described here as so many stately trees and cedars, shall feel some mitigation of their calamity, in considering, that this king, so mighty, and so powerful, is brought like themselves to the nether parts of the earth; or, that he is become their equal in the pit, in the grave, in the place of darkness, from which all distinctions of quality and condition are entirely banished. Calmet, W. Lowth.

17. — his arm,] His auxiliaries: the nations that composed his strength, and lived under his protection. W. Lowth.

18. To whom art thou thus like &c.] Oh Pharaoh! thou that art thus like to the Assyrian amongst all the kings of the earth in glory and magnificence, thou shalt also be like him in thy ruin; thou with the other princes of the world shall be brought down into the grave, and shalt be destroyed in the midst of thy fellow heathen. Bp. Hall. The latter part of ver. 2 is here resumed, and the application is directly made to Egypt. Abp. Newcome.

Chap. XXXII. ver. 2. — take up a lamentation] To the preceding funeral panegyrick over Assyria, the fate of which was past, Ezekiel prophetically subjoins a similar panegyrick over Egypt, though its fate was still future; making plainly here a happy variation in the figure. In the former case past events are brought down and represented as now present before our eyes; whereas, on the contrary, by this prophetick figure, future events are anticipated, and represented as already past. Abp. Newcome.

—— thou art as a whale] By the original word we may fitly understand a crocodile, as hath been observed upon chap. xxix. 3, and the description that follows of this creature agrees very well to a crocodile, but cannot be applied to a whale. W. Lowth.

—— and thou camest forth with thy rivers, &c.] Thou didst raise mighty armies, and lead them out against thy neighbours; see chap. xxix. 3, and the note there. By "the waters" in the next clause are intended the neighbouring people, kings, and kingdoms, whose peace and enjoyments were disturbed by the invasion of the Egyptian monarch. Poole.

5. And I will lay thy flesh upon the mountains, &c.] Implying that the vast bulk of thine armies, when they are slain, shall fill both mountains and valleys. See chap. xxxi. 12. W. Lowth.

—— with thy height.] With thy projection, or thy carcase. Capellus.

7, 8. — I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; &c.] Compare this sublime passage with chap. xxxi. 15.

The downfal and destruction of kingdoms is denoted by the strong figurative language of these verses. Kings and rulers are expressed by the sun, moon, and stars: compare Isai. xiii. 10; xxxiv. 4; Joel ii. 31. God's judgments upon particular countries being earnests of a general judgment, they are described in such terms, as if the whole frame of nature were dissolved. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth. See the notes on Isai. xiii. 10.

12 By the swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall, the terrible of the nations, all of them: and they shall spoil the pomp of Egypt, and all the multitude thereof shall be destroyed.

13 I will destroy also all the beasts thereof from beside the great waters; neither shall the foot of man trouble them any more, nor the hoofs of beasts trouble them.

14 Then will I make their waters deep, and cause their rivers to run like oil, saith the Lord GOD.

——any more,] During the forty years of desolation, chap. xxix. 11.

14. Then will I make their waters deep, and cause their rivers to run like oil, &c.] The Prophet in the second verse compared the disturbances the Egyptians gave their neighbours to the troubling and fouling of waters; in allusion to which metaphor he saith here, that when Egypt is made desolate, and the number of men and beasts diminished by their wars and confusions, then their neighbours will enjoy such quietness as a river does, that smoothly glides along, and never hath its streams fouled or disturbed. W. Lowth.

16.—the daughters of the nations] That is, the people of the neighbouring countries: so the "daughter of Zion" and "of Babylon" signifies the inhabitants of those cities. The expression alludes to the mourning women, whose profession it was to lament at funerals. W. Lowth.

17.—in the fifteenth day of the month,] Probably of the twelfth month: see ver. 1. Calmet, W. Lowth.

18. Son of man, wail for the multitude &c.] This prophetick ode is a masterpiece in that species of writing, which is appropriated to the exciting of terrour. Bp. Lowth.

——and cast them down, &c.] The Prophets are said to do what they foretell: see chap. xliii. 3; Jer. i. 10. Abp. Secker.

——into the pit.] An imitation may be observed here of that sublime chapter, the 14th of Isaiah. But our Prophet has so conducted it in his own manner, that fertility of genius, copiousness of diction, and variety of expression, are not less to be admired in the one than in the other. Dathius. Bp. Lowth remarks, that Ezekiel has here described the same scene, with all the same circumstances as Isaiah; affording in it a singular example of the sublime and terrible, for which the former Prophet is so peculiarly distinguished. Abp. Newcome.

20.—draw her] Drag her carcase to the sepulchre. The words are addressed to the Babylonians. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

21. The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell with them that help him:] "Hell" signifies here the state of the dead, where the deceased tyrants with their subjects are represented as coming to meet the king of Egypt with his auxiliaries (see chap. xxx. 8.) upon their arrival at the same place. Compare chap. xxxi. 16, 17; Isai. xiv. 9, &c. W. Lowth, Bp. Hall.

——they are gone down, &c.] These warriours, famous in their time for their exploits, have undergone the same fate with other men of blood, and are gone down to the grave by violent deaths. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 587.

31 Pharaoh shall see them, and shall be comforted over all his multitude, even Pharaoh and all his army slain by the sword, saith the Lord GOD.

32 For I have caused my terror in the land of the living: and he shall be laid in the midst of the uncircumcised with them that are slain with the sword, even Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord GOD.

CHAP. XXXIII.

1 According to the duty of a watchman, in warning the people, 7 Ezekiel is admonished of his duty. 10 God sheweth the justice of his ways towards the penitent, and towards revolters. 17 He maintaineth his justice. 21 Upon the news of the taking of Jerusalem he prophesieth the desolation of the land. 30 God's judgment upon the mockers of the prophets.

AGAIN the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 587.

2 Son of man, speak to the children of thy people, and say unto them, † When I bring the sword upon a land, if the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him for their watchman:

† Heb. A land when I bring a sword upon her.

3 If when he seeth the sword come upon the land, he blow the trumpet, and warn the people;

4 Then † whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come, and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head.

† Heb. he that hearing heareth.

5 He heard the sound of the trumpet, and took not warning; his blood shall be upon him. But he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul.

25. — a bed] The cell which receives the sarcophagus is called "the bed." Bp. Lowth.

26. — Meshech, Tubal,] See chap. xxvii. 13, and note. The Scythians may be comprehended, who anciently governed Asia. This is no other than the well known expulsion of the Scythians from Media by Cyaxares, as Jackson hath also rightly observed. Abp. Newcome.

27. And they shall not lie with the mighty &c.] They shall not lie among those heathen heroes who died a natural death, and are laid in their graves with pomp and magnificence; see Isai. xiv. 18, 19. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

—— and they have laid their swords under their heads,] It has been the custom of all ages to adorn the sepulchres of heroes with their swords and other trophies of war. W. Lowth.

"In Mingrelia they all sleep with their swords under their heads, and their other arms by their sides; and they bury them in the same manner, their arms being placed in the same position." This is the account of Sir John Chardin; and the extract becomes more interesting and important, when it is considered, that, according to Bochart and other learned men, Meshech and Tubal mean Mingrelia and the country thereabout. Harmer.

29. — Edom, her kings, and all her princes,] Of whose destruction Ezekiel prophesied, chap. xxv. 12. W. Lowth.

30. — the princes of the north,] By "the princes of the north" may be understood the Tyrians and their allies, (chap. xxvi. 16,) joined here with the Zidonians their neighbours. Calmet, W. Lowth. Others understand the Syrian kings who reigned at Damascus. Abp. Newcome.

31. — and shall be comforted] As it affords some relief to calamitous persons to see others in the same condition with themselves, chap. xxxi. 16. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXXIII. ver. 1. Again the word of the Lord &c.] It is plain that Ezekiel uttered what is contained in this chapter to ver. 20, before Jerusalem was taken by the Babylonians: but how long before is uncertain. Abp. Newcome.

2. — a man of their coasts,] From among them. W. Lowth. Out of their borders: the proper place to station watchmen. Abp. Newcome.

3. — when he seeth the sword] When he spieth the enemy. W. Lowth.

5. — But he that taketh warning] Shall save his soul from the danger that threatens it: in like manner he that takes warning by the Prophet's admonition, shall preserve himself from the judgment threatened against sinners. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST 587.

6 But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand.

[a] Chap. 3. 17, &c.

7 ¶ [a] So thou, O son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me.

8 When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

9 Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.

10 Therefore, O thou son of man, speak unto the house of Israel; Thus ye speak, saying, If our transgressions and our sins be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live?

11 Say unto them, As I live, saith the [b] 2 Sam. 14. 14. ch. 18. 32.

Lord GOD, [b] I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for [c] why will ye die, O house of Israel?

Before CHRIST 587.

[c] Chap. 18. 31.

12 Therefore, thou son of man, say unto the children of thy people, The [d] righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression: as for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the day that he sinneth.

[d] Chap. 18. 24.

13 When I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live; if he trust to his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it.

14 Again, when I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; if he turn from his sin, and do † that which is lawful and right;

† Heb. judgment and justice.

15 If the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity; he shall surely live, he shall not die.

16 None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him: he

7—9. — I have set thee a watchman &c.] See chap. iii. 17—19.

10. — If our transgressions—be upon us, and we pine away &c.] If according to thy prophecies God has determined to reckon with us for our sins, and to bring judgment upon us, to what purpose shall our conversion be? and how shall we live, though we do amend? Bp. Hall. They are the words of persons despairing of God's mercy, and from thence taking occasion to go on in their sins. See a like instance Jer. ii. 25. W. Lowth.

11. — As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; &c.] We have here one of the most express declarations to be found in the whole Scripture, of the infinite mercy of God. God swears by Himself, that He would not by any means the death of the wicked; that He desires nothing but their conversion and life; and receives them graciously as soon as they return to Him. The consideration of God's great mercy should fill sinners with confidence, and engage them to repent, and thereby prevent their ruin. Ostervald.

These are most comfortable words: for now we may be sure, that when we will leave our sins and wickedness, and turn unto Him with all our hearts earnestly, then He will turn Himself unto us, and will shew Himself a loving Father. And to the intent we should believe this, He sweareth an oath: we ought to believe God without an oath, yet He sweareth, to make us more sure. Bp. Latimer.

God declares Himself to bear an universal good will to mankind; that He doth earnestly desire the welfare of all men; and is displeased with the ruin of any man. This He affirms; and, for the confirmation of our faith, and our consolation therein, He swears it: "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live." See also Isai. v. 4; Hos. xiii. 9; Isai. lxv. 2; Rom. x. 21; Jer. vii. 31; Prov. i. 24, 29; Isai. lxv. 12; lxvi. 4; i. 18; Jer. vi. 10; Zech. vii. 11, 12. Which passages, and many others of the like importance that occur, do imply the large extent of God's merciful intentions, and the competency of the means, which God affords for the salvation of men; that He wants no affection or inclination to save them; that He neglects no means proper for effecting it; that He draws them into the way leading thither by serious and earnest invitation, directs them by powerful light and instruction, excites them by powerful arguments and persuasions; and, as St. Ambrose speaketh, that "God hath shewed to all, that, what was in Him, He did will to deliver or save all men." Whence He may truly and properly be called the Benefactor and Saviour even of those, who by their wilful malice or neglect do not obtain salvation. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

12, 13. — The righteousness of the righteous &c.] See chap. xviii. 26, 27, and note.

13. — if he trust to his own righteousness,] If he rely upon the good works that he hath done, and think the worth of them will overbalance his evil deeds. This seems to be the persuasion of the latter Jews, who lay this down for a certain rule in their Mishna, that all Israel hath a share in the world to come. The Mahometans think the same respecting themselves. Reland, W. Lowth.

14. — when I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; &c.] In the whole course of Scripture, God's threatenings, and so His promises too, have ever a condition annexed to them in God's purpose: which though it be not ever, indeed but seldom, expressed, yet is it ever included, and so to be understood. All God's promises, how absolutely soever expressed, are made on condition of obedience; and all His threatenings, how absolutely soever expressed, on condition of impenitence. This is plain from the passage before us; where Almighty God clearly teaches us, that we ought so to conceive of all His threatenings, be they never so peremptorily set down, (as what more peremptory than this, "Thou shalt surely die?") as that He may reserve to Himself a power of revocation, in case the parties threatened repent. Bp. Sanderson.

15. — give again that he had robbed,] The law was express to this purpose, Lev. vi. 5, where the offender is required to add a fifth part to the principal, and give it to him to whom it appertaineth. W. Lowth.

hath done that which is lawful and right; he shall surely live.

17 ¶ Yet the children of thy people say, The way of the LORD is not equal: but as for them, their way is not equal.

18 When the righteous turneth from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, he shall even die thereby.

19 But if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby.

[e] Chap. 18. 25.

20 ¶ Yet ye say, [e] The way of the LORD is not equal. O ye house of Israel, I will judge you every one after his ways.

21 ¶ And it came to pass in the twelfth year of our captivity, in the tenth month, in the fifth day of the month, that one that had escaped out of Jerusalem came unto me, saying, [f] The city is smitten.

[f] 2 Kings 25. 4.

22 Now the hand of the LORD was upon me in the evening, afore he that was escaped came; and had opened my mouth, until he came to me in the morning; and my mouth was opened, and I was no more [g] dumb.

[g] Chap. 24. 27.

23 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

24 Son of man, they that inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel speak, saying, Abraham was one, and he inherited the land: but we are many; the land is given us for inheritance.

25 Wherefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Ye eat with the blood, and lift up your eyes toward your idols, and shed blood: and shall ye possess the land?

Before CHRIST 587.

26 Ye stand upon your sword, ye work abomination, and ye defile every one his neighbour's wife: and shall ye possess the land?

27 Say thou thus unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; As I live, surely they that are in the wastes shall fall by the sword, and him that is in the open field will I give to the beasts † to be devoured, and they that be in the forts and in the caves shall die of the pestilence.

† Heb. to devour him.

28 For I will lay the land † most desolate, and the [h] pomp of her strength shall cease; and the mountains of Israel shall be desolate, that none shall pass through.

† Heb. desolation and desolation.

[h] Chap. 7. 24. & 24. 21. & 30. 6, 7.

29 Then shall they know that I am the LORD, when I have laid the land most desolate because of all their abominations which they have committed.

30 ¶ Also, thou son of man, the children of thy people still are talking against thee by the walls and in the doors of the houses, and speak one to another, every one to his brother, saying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the LORD.

31 And they come unto thee † as the people cometh, and ‖ they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth † they shew much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness.

† Heb. according to the coming of the people.

‖ Or, my people sit before thee.

† Heb. they make loves, or, jests.

32 And, lo, thou art unto them as † a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not.

22. — the hand of the Lord was upon me] I felt an impulse of the prophetical Spirit, chap. i. 3. W. Lowth.

24. — they that inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel] They that are left behind in the land that is now wasted with fire and sword, ver. 27, and chap. xxxvi. 4. W. Lowth.

—— Abraham was one, &c.] If Abraham, being but one, had this land given to him for an inheritance; how much more may we, his seed, to whom it is deduced, being many, challenge an interest in it? Bp. Hall.

The title of "one" is elsewhere given to Abraham, as being the original and head of the Jewish nation; Isai. li. 2; Mal. ii. 15; Heb. xi. 12. W. Lowth.

25. — Ye eat with the blood,] Ye are not the sons of faithful Abraham; your works are contrary to his; ye eat the blood together with the flesh which I have forbidden; ye are guilty both of idolatry and murder; and shall ye challenge to possess the land in the right of Abraham? Bp. Hall.

26. Ye stand upon your sword,] Ye rely upon the confidence of your own sword. Bp. Hall.

27. — shall fall by the sword, &c.] The three judgments here mentioned, together with famine, are often threatened as the last and finishing stroke of God's vengeance upon the Jewish nation; see chap. v. 12, 17; vi. 12; xiv. 21; Jer. xv. 3. W. Lowth.

—— in the caves] The caves here mentioned were a sort of strong holds, formed by nature in the rocks, or cut out under the tops of mountains. They were so large that men might secure themselves, their families, and their goods in them; such was the cave of "Adullam," mentioned 1 Sam. xxii. 1; 2 Sam. xxiii. 13. W. Lowth.

30. — talking against thee] Rather, "of thee:" this is in some editions the marginal and probably the right translation. Abp. Secker.

—— by the walls and in the doors] Both in their publick places of concourse and in their private meetings. W. Lowth.

31. — as the people cometh,] As disciples flock to their teachers; so the Chaldee Paraphrase explains it. W. Lowth.

—— and they sit] See note on chap. viii. 1.

—— with their mouth they shew much love,] According to the marginal reading the sense is, that they turned the Prophet's words into jest; but by comparing this with the following verse, we may rather understand the phrase in this sense, that they were delighted with the Prophet's harmonious voice, or attractive eloquence, but would not make the proper use of what he said for correcting their evil manners. W. Lowth.

—— but their heart goeth after their covetousness.] Their worldly desires of whatever sort. Abp. Secker.

32. And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song] They were struck with his eloquence without regarding his exhortations and admonitions.

It is no unusual thing for people to listen to discourses from the ministers of God only to enjoy the satisfaction, which a well-composed discourse naturally affords. Their ears are gratified,

Before CHRIST 587.

33 And when this cometh to pass, (lo, it will come,) then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them.

CHAP. XXXIV.

1 A reproof of the shepherds. 7 God's judgment against them. 11 His providence for his flock. 20 The kingdom of Christ.

587. AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

[a] Jer. 23. 1. 2 Son of man, prophesy against the [a] shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD unto the shepherds; Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! should not the shepherds feed the flocks?

3 Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock.

4 The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye

[b] 1 Pet. 5. 3. sought that which was lost; but with [b] force and with cruelty have ye ruled them.

‖ Or, without a shepherd: and so ver. 8. 5 And they were scattered, ‖ because there is no shepherd: and they became meat to all the beasts of the field, when they were scattered.

6 My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them.

Before CHRIST 587.

7 ¶ Therefore, ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD;

8 As I live, saith the Lord GOD, surely because my flock became a prey, and my flock became meat to every beast of the field, because there was no shepherd, neither did my shepherds search for my flock, but the shepherds fed themselves, and fed not my flock;

9 Therefore, O ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD;

10 Thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I am against the shepherds; and I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them.

11 ¶ For thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out.

† Heb. According to the seeking. 12 † As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, their sentiments are enlivened, agreeable emotions of various kinds are excited. So the hearer is pleased, the speaker is commended and followed; but with no thought of practising one word that he hath said. This is the turn of mind so admirably described many ages ago by the Prophet Ezekiel in this passage. But religious instruction could never be appointed to give such empty, insignificant delight as this: nor doth it in the least attain its proper end, unless it influences men to forget the preacher, and think of themselves: unless it raises in them, not a superficial complacency, or an idle admiration, but an awful and a durable solicitude about their eternal welfare. Abp. Secker.

33. And when this cometh to pass,] This matter, this event, the destruction of Jerusalem. Abp. Newcome.

—— (lo, it will come,)] Or rather, "lo, it is come," chap. vii. 2, 6, 10; the verb being in the present tense. When you see my prophecies concerning the destruction of Jerusalem actually brought to pass, as it appears they are at this time; see ver. 21; then you will be convinced of the truth of my mission, and of your own inexcusable crime in despising my predictions; see chap. xxiv. 27. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXXIV. ver. 1. — came unto me,] It is probable that this prophecy immediately followed the preceding. At or before the news that Jerusalem was conquered, the Prophet was to speak of the tyranny and carelessness of the governours, and to promise the return of the people. Michaelis. The negligence of the governours being pointed out as a cause of the incredulity of the people, the transition here is natural, and the connexion close between this prophecy and the foregoing one; as also between the beginning of this prophecy and its conclusion. For considering that in part the people suffered for the faults of their shepherds, mercy now urged the Prophet to declare from God, that He would judge between them, save the flock, and set up one Shepherd over them, who should feed them, even His servant David. Abp. Newcome.

2. — shepherds] The king, his counsellors, and the heads of the people. Michaelis. The word "shepherd" comprehends governours both civil and ecclesiastical; compare Isai. lvi. 11; Jer. ii. 8; xxiii. 1. W. Lowth.

—— that do feed themselves!] That regard their own profit and advantages, not the good of the people committed to their charge. W. Lowth

3. Ye eat the fat,] Or the milk; milk and fat being expressed by the same word in Hebrew. W. Lowth.

—— ye kill them that are fed:] The wealthy and substantial, to enrich yourselves. W. Lowth.

4. The diseased have ye not strengthened,] Those particular offices which belong to your charge, as comforting the weak, healing the sick, binding up the broken-hearted, reclaiming and reducing those that have erred, ye have not accordingly done; but rather have tyrannously and cruelly exercised an imperious authority over them. Bp. Hall.

The same allegory holds, ver. 5—10. Jesus Christ made the same reproach to the Scribes and Pharisees, Matt. xxiii. 4; see also 1 Pet. v. 2, 3. Calmet.

5. — no shepherd:] None in effect; none deserving the name. Abp. Newcome.

—— meat to all the beasts of the field,] That is, to their enemies, who as so many beasts of prey have spoiled and devoured them; compare Jer. xii. 9; Isai. lvi. 9. W. Lowth.

10. — I will require my flock at their hand,] I will require a severe account from their kings and princes, their priests and prophets, of the damage My people have sustained through their ill management; and I will deprive them of that honour and pre-eminence, which they have so abused, as I have already displaced Zedekiah, and the princes, priests, and others, that were in authority under him. W. Lowth. All this actually came to pass at the taking of Jerusalem, and at the captivity which followed of their kings, and of their priests, and of the people. Calmet.

11. — and seek them out.] The Hebrew word signifies to seek early, to seek in the morning. Abp. Newcome.

and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day.

13 And I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country.

14 I will feed them in a good pasture, and upon the high mountains of Israel shall their fold be: there shall they lie in a good fold, and in a fat pasture shall they feed upon the mountains of Israel.

15 I will feed my flock, and I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord GOD.

16 I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick: but I will destroy the fat and the strong; I will feed them with judgment.

17 And as for you, O my flock, thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I judge between † cattle and cattle, between the rams and the † he goats.

18 Seemeth it a small thing unto you to have eaten up the good pasture, but ye must tread down with your feet the residue of your pastures? and to have drunk of the deep waters, but ye must foul the residue with your feet?

19 And as for my flock, they eat that which ye have trodden with your feet; and they drink that which ye have fouled with your feet.

Before CHRIST 587.

20 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD unto them; Behold, I, even I, will judge between the fat cattle and between the lean cattle.

21 Because ye have thrust with side and with shoulder, and pushed all the diseased with your horns, till ye have scattered them abroad;

22 Therefore will I save my flock, and they shall no more be a prey; and I will judge between cattle and cattle.

23 And I will set up one [c] shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd.

[c] Isai. 40. 11. John 10. 11.

24 And I the LORD will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them; I the LORD have spoken it.

25 And I will make with them a covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land: and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods.

26 And I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessing.

27 And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land, and shall know that I am the LORD, when I have broken the bands of their yoke, and

12. — in the cloudy and dark day.] Clouds mark seasons of misery, persecution, and trouble; see Joel ii. 2; Zeph. i. 15. Wolves profit by mists and darkness to plunder and devour the flock. Calmet.

13. And I will bring them out from the people,] I will fetch them from those several lands, whereinto they were driven by their miserable captivity, and will bring them back into their own country, and will feed them carefully and plentifully in My Church. So also the three following verses. Bp. Hall.

16. I will seek that which was lost,] The Messiah, whom I will set over them, see ver. 23, shall faithfully discharge all the offices of a shepherd towards them, which their former pastors have neglected, ver. 4. W. Lowth.

—— but I will destroy the fat and the strong;] Meaning, I will destroy those cruel shepherds who abuse their authority and domineer over the weak. Calmet, W. Lowth.

17. — between cattle and cattle,] Behold, I judge between one man and another, between the lambs and kids, between the rams and goats: as I do now put a difference between those of My own flock, and the world; so hereafter I will exquisitely sever them, the one to My right hand, the other to My left. Bp. Hall.

18. Seemeth it a small thing unto you to have eaten up the good pasture, &c.] Is it not very great cruelty and most barbarous inhumanity, that you, who have much more than others, partly by the bounty of the Lord of the sheep, and partly by your injustice and rapine, should eat the sweet and better parts of the pasture, and waste and spoil what you cannot eat? Thus the people are starved by your wantonness and oppression, or compelled to live on unwholesome and noxious food. Poole.

23. — one shepherd over them,—even my servant David;] Jesus Christ the true Shepherd, to whom the title of David is given by the Prophets, and attributed by Himself in the Gospel, and who has fulfilled all the duties, after having faithfully described all the characters of the office. The Scriptures call this Shepherd David, because He was born of David after the flesh, and possessed in reality, and eminently, all those qualities, which the Scriptures give to David, under the figure of the Messiah. Calmet, Bp. Hall.

—— he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd.] This prophecy was remarkably fulfilled, when Christ by the preaching of the Gospel "gathered in one the children of God, that were scattered abroad," John xi. 52; Ephes. i. 10; among whom were many "of the lost sheep of the house of Israel." But it will receive a further completion at the general conversion of the Jews, when the time will come, that they shall say, "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord," Matt. xxiii. 39: and this signal event will usher in, or complete the fulness of the Gentiles; see Rom. xi. 12, 15, 25, 32. W. Lowth.

24. — and my servant David a prince among them;] The Messiah; the true heir and successor of David. Bp. Hall.

25. — the evil beasts to cease] And I will keep them from those spiritual dangers that may be hurtful to them; see ver. 8 of this chapter. Calmet. The words may be meant of freedom from persecution by infidels and strangers. W. Lowth.

26. And I will make them &c. — a blessing;] I will there give remarkable instances of My favour, and the happiness which accompanies it; see Gen. xii. 2; Isai. xix. 24. God's hill is the same with His "holy mountain," chap. xx. 40. W. Lowth.

31 And ye my [e] flock, the flock of my pasture, are men, and I am your God, saith the Lord GOD.

CHAP. XXXV.

The judgment of mount Seir for their hatred of Israel.

587.

MOREOVER the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against mount Seir, and prophesy against it,

3 And say unto it, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, O mount Seir, I am against thee, and I will stretch out mine hand against thee, and I will make thee † most desolate.

† Heb. desolation and desolation.

4 I will lay thy cities waste, and thou shalt be desolate, and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

5 Because thou hast had a ‖ perpetual hatred, and hast † shed the blood of the children of Israel by the † force of the sword in the time of their calamity, in the time that their iniquity had an end:

Before CHRIST 587.

6 Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord GOD, I will prepare thee unto blood, and blood shall pursue thee: sith thou hast not hated blood, even blood shall pursue thee.

7 Thus will I make mount Seir † most desolate, and cut off from it him that passeth out and him that returneth.

† Heb. desolation and desolation.

8 And I will fill his mountains with his slain men: in thy hills, and in thy valleys, and in all thy rivers, shall they fall that are slain with the sword.

9 I will make thee perpetual desolations, and thy cities shall not return: and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

10 Because thou hast said, These two nations and these two countries shall be mine, and we will [a] possess it; ‖ whereas the LORD was there:

[a] Ps. 83. 4, 12. ‖ Or, though the LORD was there.

11 Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord GOD, I will even do according to thine anger, and according to thine envy which thou hast used out of thy hatred against them; and I will make myself known among them, when I have judged thee.

12 And thou shalt know that I am the LORD, and that I have heard all thy blasphemies which thou hast spoken against the mountains of Israel, saying, They are laid desolate, they are given us † to consume.

13 Thus with your mouth ye have † boasted against me, and have multiplied your words against me: I have heard them.

14 Thus saith the Lord GOD; When the whole earth rejoiceth, I will make thee desolate.

---

29. And I will raise up for them a plant of renown,] I will make them a glorious plant, being fast rooted in that promised Messiah, and being incorporated in Him; and they shall no more be consumed with a spiritual famine, nor be trampled upon by the enemies of My Church. Bp. Hall.

The Messiah is often described under the name of "the Branch," and "the Rod," or shoot, growing out of the stem of Jesse; see Isai. iv. 2; xi. 1; Jer. xxiii. 5; Zech. iii. 8; vi. 12. W. Lowth.

31. And ye my flock, &c.] These words at the conclusion of the chapter explain the metaphor, which runs through the whole; that what was said of a flock and its shepherds, is to be understood of men and their governours, and especially of God's people, whom He takes care of, as a shepherd does of his flock, chap. xxxvi. 38. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXXV. ver. 2. — mount Seir,] Idumea; see Deut. ii. 5, where God says, that He has "given mount Seir unto Esau for a possession." The Prophet goes on to shew, that the same reason which will operate in favour of the Jews, will not operate in favour of the heathen, especially not in favour of the Edomites, for they shewed no mercy, and therefore deserved to receive none; and because they had a perpetual hatred, were to be made a perpetual desolation. Abp. Newcome.

5. — a perpetual hatred,] See chap. xxv. 12. The enmity of the Edomites and the Jews had begun as it were in the womb of their common mother. This was afterwards aggravated by other griefs; and though Jacob's prudent calmness softened it for a time, yet their descendants did not fail to perpetuate their quarrel, which was always certain to be revived, whenever an occasion offered. The last strong proof of this enmity was given by the Edomites at the siege of Jerusalem, when they afflicted the Jews, already oppressed by the Chaldeans. Calmet.

6. — blood shall pursue thee:] Thy bloodguiltiness shall pursue thee; thou shalt be punished for it. Michaelis.

9. I will make thee perpetual desolations, &c.] See chap. xxv. 13; Jer. xlix. 17, 18.

10. Because thou hast said, These two nations &c.] These two nations, Israel and Judah, and their countries wasted by the Assyrian and Babylonian, shall be mine, and we will possess it; whereas, however this land is abused, it is the Lord's peculiar, and therefore out of thy reach, and free from any challenge of thine. Bp. Hall, Abp. Newcome.

11. — I will make myself known among them, when I have judged thee.] I will make My people see that I have not quite cast them off, by My avenging their quarrel upon thee. W. Lowth.

14. — When the whole earth rejoiceth,] After the return from the captivity, when all thy neighbours, conquered by the king of Babylon, shall be restored in peace and prosperity, thou shalt be reduced to distress and desolation. Calmet.

The Edomites never recovered their country after their expul-

Before CHRIST 587.

15 As thou didst rejoice at the inheritance of the house of Israel, because it was desolate, so will I do unto thee: thou shalt be desolate, O mount Seir, and all Idumea, even all of it: and they shall know that I am the LORD.

CHAP. XXXVI.

1 The land of Israel is comforted, both by destruction of the heathen, who spitefully used it, 8 and by the blessings of God promised unto it. 16 Israel was rejected for their sin, 21 and shall be restored without their desert. 25 The blessings of Christ's kingdom.

587.

ALSO, thou son of man, prophesy unto the [a] mountains of Israel, and say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the LORD:

[a] Chap. 6. 2.

2 Thus saith the Lord GOD; Because the enemy hath said against you, Aha, even the ancient high places are our's in possession:

3 Therefore prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord GOD; † Because they have made you desolate, and swallowed you up on every side, that ye might be a possession unto the residue of the heathen, and ‖ ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are an infamy of the people:

† Heb. Because for because.

‖ Or, ye are made to come upon the lip of the tongue.

4 Therefore, ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord GOD; Thus saith the Lord GOD to the mountains, and to the hills, to the ‖ rivers, and to the valleys, to the desolate wastes, and to the cities that are forsaken, which became a prey and derision to the residue of the heathen that are round about;

‖ Or, bottoms, or, dales.

5 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; Surely in the fire of my jealousy have I spoken against the residue of the heathen, and against all Idumea, which have appointed my land into their possession with the joy of all their heart, with despiteful minds, to cast it out for a prey.

Before CHRIST 587.

6 Prophesy therefore concerning the land of Israel, and say unto the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I have spoken in my jealousy and in my fury, because ye have borne the shame of the heathen:

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; I have lifted up mine hand, Surely the heathen that are about you, they shall bear their shame.

8 ¶ But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come.

9 For, behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown:

10 And I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded:

11 And I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit: and I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings: and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

12 Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men.

13 Thus saith the Lord GOD; Because sion from it by the Nabatheans, who drove them out of their ancient habitations in the time of the Babylonish captivity; they then settled themselves in the southern part of Judea, where they were afterwards conquered by Hyrcanus, and obliged to embrace the Jewish religion, and so became incorporated with that nation. Dean Prideaux.

Chap. XXXVI. ver. 1. —prophesy unto the mountains of Israel,] This prophecy is the sequel of that contained in the last chapter. Calmet.

2. —even the ancient high places are our's in possession:] The Edomites have made their boasts, (chap. xxxv. 10,) that they should become masters of the mountainous parts of Judea, where the ancient fortresses were placed, which commanded all the rest of the country; see Deut. xxxii. 13. W. Lowth.

3. —the residue] The nations which remained unconquered by the Babylonians. Abp. Newcome.

——and ye are taken up in the lips of talkers,] Your name is scornfully taken up in the lips of your busy and insulting enemies, and ye are made a byword and reproach of the people. Bp. Hall.

5. —in the fire of my jealousy] In that fervent zeal and concern that I have for My own honour, which is blasphemed among the heathen; see chap. xxxv. 12, 13. W. Lowth.

6. —ye have borne the shame of the heathen:] The reproach and insult; see chap. xxxiv. 29.

7. —I have lifted up mine hand,] I have solemnly sworn; see chap. xx. 5. W. Lowth.

8. —for they are at hand to come.] They, My people Israel, are near the time of their coming from Babylon into their own land. Abp. Newcome.

The most sensible interpreters seem to agree, that there are several expressions in this chapter, particularly in the latter part of it, which cannot be literally understood of any event, excepting of the reign of the Messiah, of the freedom that He has procured for His Church, of another promised land, and of a chosen people, different from that of the Jews; but at the same time that there may be recognised in it certain forms of speech, which have had their literal accomplishment, since the return of the Jews from the captivity. Calmet.

10. —and the wastes shall be builded:] Compare ver. 33. This may likewise in some measure have been fulfilled at their return from Babylon, Isai. lviii. 12; lxi. 4. W. Lowth.

12. —bereave them of men.] By the sword, pestilence, and famine, which were God's judgments upon His people for their idolatries. Abp. Newcome.

Before CHRIST 587.

they say unto you, Thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations;

14 Therefore thou shalt devour men no more, neither ‖ bereave thy nations any more, saith the Lord GOD.

‖ Or, cause to fall.

15 Neither will I cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more, saith the Lord GOD.

16 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

17 Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it by their own way and by their doings: their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman.

18 Wherefore I poured my fury upon them for the blood that they had shed upon the land, and for their idols wherewith they had polluted it:

19 And I scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries: according to their way and according to their doings I judged them.

20 And when they entered unto the heathen, whither they went, they [b] profaned my holy name, when they said to them, These are the people of the LORD, and are gone forth out of his land.

[b] Isai. 52. 5. Rom. 2. 24.

21 ¶ But I had pity for mine holy name, which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went.

22 Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD; I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went.

Before CHRIST 587.

23 And I will sanctify my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and the heathen shall know that I am the LORD, saith the Lord GOD, when I shall be sanctified in you before ‖ their eyes.

‖ Or, your.

24 For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land.

25 ¶ Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you.

26 A [c] new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh.

[c] Jer. 32. 39. ch. 11. 19.

27 And I will put my [d] spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them.

[d] Chap. 11. 19.

28 And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

29 I will also save you from all your uncleannesses: and I will call for the corn, and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you.

30 And I will multiply the fruit of the

13. —they say unto you, Thou land devourest up] The neighbouring nations observed the heavy sufferings of Israel and Judah, and accused the land of exterminating its inhabitants. Abp. Newcome. Compare Numb. xiii. 32.

17. —their way was before me as the uncleanness &c.] Their continual practice was as foul and odious to Me, as can be expressed by any legal uncleanness. Bp. Hall.

18. —for the blood] They had shed the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they offered to their idols; see chap. xvi. 36. They had also shed innocent blood in their cities, chap. vii. 23; ix. 9. Calmet.

20. —they profaned my holy name,] They caused My holy name to be scorned and evil spoken of, in that it was said of these so wicked and lewd persons, Lo, these are the select people of the Lord, and those that were inhabitants of His holy land. Bp. Hall.

21. But I had pity for mine holy name,] I wrought for My name's sake, that it should not be polluted among the heathen; see chap. xx. 9; compare Deut. ix. 5; Ps. cvi. 8.

23. —and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord,] The return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity was taken notice of by the heathens, as a signal instance of God's providence towards them, Ps. cxxvi. 2; and their general conversion will be a much more remarkable proof of My fulfilling the promises made to their fathers; so that the heathens themselves will be forced to take notice of it, chap. xxxvii. 28. W. Lowth.

—— when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes.] When I shall glorify Myself by working your deliverance, and your apparent reformation before their eyes. Bp. Hall.

25. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean:] Allusion is here made to the purifications which were effected in the Jewish Church, by sprinkling pure water upon persons under legal pollution; these were types of baptism, and of that penitence which cleanses us from our sins, through the blood of Jesus Christ, and by the invisible aspersion of His Holy Spirit and grace. It is only therefore in the general establishment of the Church of God, that the real and perfect accomplishment of this prophecy can come to pass. St. Paul may probably allude to this text, when he exhorts the Hebrew converts "to draw near to God, having their hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and their bodies washed with pure water." Calmet, W. Lowth.

26. —the stony heart out of your flesh,] I will take away your perverse and rebellious disposition; I will give you a tenderness of heart, and an aptness to be wrought upon by the motions of My Spirit. Bp. Hall. Certain it is, that the Jews gave much less occasion for reproach after their return from captivity, more particularly upon the subject of idolatry, and of those other disorders with which they had been reproached by the Prophets, than before that event took place; but their conduct even then was far from being such as to resemble that picture of perfection, of purity, of docility, and of justice, which is described here, and in other places of the Prophets. It is Christianity alone which removes the "heart of stone," and supplies "the heart of flesh." Calmet.

tree, and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen.

31 Then shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall lothe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities and for your abominations.

32 Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord GOD, be it known unto you: be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel.

33 Thus saith the Lord GOD; In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded.

34 And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by.

35 And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of [e] Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited.

[e] Chap. 28. 13.

36 Then the heathen that are left round about you shall know that I the LORD build the ruined places, and plant that that was desolate: I [f] the LORD have spoken it, and I will do it.

[f] Chap. 17. 24. & 22. 14. & 37. 14.

37 Thus saith the Lord GOD; I will yet for this be enquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock.

38 As the † holy flock, as the flock of Jerusalem in her solemn feasts; so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men: and they shall know that I am the LORD.

† Heb. flock of holy things.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Before CHRIST about 587.

1 By the resurrection of dry bones, 11 the dead hope of Israel is revived. 15 By the uniting of two sticks, 18 is shewed the incorporation of Israel into Judah. 20 The promises of Christ's kingdom.

THE hand of the LORD was upon me, about 587. and carried me out in the spirit of the LORD, and set me down in the midst of the valley which was full of bones,

2 And caused me to pass by them round about: and, behold, there were very many in the open ‖ valley; and, lo, they were very dry.

‖ Or, champaign.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, O Lord GOD, thou knowest.

4 Again he said unto me, Prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the LORD.

5 Thus saith the Lord GOD unto these bones; Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live:

6 And I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

7 So I prophesied as I was commanded: and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone.

8 And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above: but there was no breath in them.

9 Then said he unto me, Prophesy unto the ‖ wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord GOD;

31. — and shall lothe yourselves in your own sight] When the Prophets foretell the general conversion of the Jews, they usually mention their detestation of their former idolatries, as a necessary preparation towards it. See Isai. i. 27; xvii. 7, 8; Jer. iii. 22, &c. W. Lowth.

37. — I will yet for this be enquired of by the house of Israel,] God in His anger tells the Jews, that He will not be enquired of by them, chap. xiv. 3; xx. 3, 31: intimating, that during their continuance in idolatry and other wickedness, they ought not to address themselves to Him, nor expect any favourable answer to their requests. But now, upon their repentance and reconciliation, He tells them, that He will be enquired of by them; that is, He will dispose their hearts to apply themselves to Him by prayer, and will answer the petitions they make to Him, for fulfilling these His promises, Ps. x. 17; Jer. xxix. 13. W. Lowth. By these words God hath given us to understand, that, whatsoever blessing He hath promised, we must pray unto Him for it, otherwise we shall not have it. Bp. Beveridge.

38. As the holy flock,] As Jerusalem in her holy feasts is filled with whole flocks and herds of those cattle that are brought up thither for sacrifice, so shall all the waste cities of Israel be filled with the flocks of man. Bp. Hall. The epithet of "holy" and "most holy" is often applied to sacrifices in the Levitical law, as being wholly dedicated to God, and set apart for His worship. See Lev. vi. 25, 29. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXXVII. ver. 1. — and carried me out in the spirit of the Lord,] Or, by the Spirit of the Lord. Compare chap. iii. 14; viii. 3; xi. 24. This was performed, either by a local translation of the Prophet, or else by way of vision, or lively representation. W. Lowth.

3. — O Lord God, thou knowest.] The Prophet replies, that the restoration of the bones to life was more than human reason could conceive, but acknowledges that nothing was impossible with God. Bp. Hall.

4. — O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord.] A prophetical and lively representation of that voice of the Son of God, which all that are in their graves shall hear at the last day, and shall come forth out of them, John v. 28, 29. W. Lowth. See the notes on Isai. xxvi. 19.

7. So I prophesied as I was commanded:] So I spake to those bones as I was commanded. Bp. Hall.

—— bone to — bone.] Each bone to its corresponding bone in the human body. Abp. Newcome.

8. — no breath] No life; no vital principle. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 587. Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live.

10 So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

11 ¶ Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts.

12 Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel.

13 And ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, 14 And shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land: then shall ye know that I the LORD have spoken it, and performed it, saith the LORD.

15 ¶ The word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

16 Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions: Before CHRIST about 587.

17 And join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand.

18 ¶ And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not shew us what thou meanest by these?

19 Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.

20 ¶ And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes.

21 And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land:

22 And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and [a] one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, [a] Joh. 10. 16.

9. — Come from the four winds, O breath,] The words figuratively represent the restoration of the Jewish nation from the several countries, whither they were dispersed, over the whole world; expressed by their being scattered towards all winds, chap. v. 10; xii. 14. W. Lowth.

11. — these bones are the whole house of Israel:] The state of death and dryness, of dispersion and abandonment, in which you see them, marks the captivity to which they are reduced. I will draw them from that state. Calmet.

12. — your graves,] Alluding to their being buried, as it were, in the land of their captivity. The Jews seemed as absolutely deprived of their own country, as persons committed to the grave are cut off from the land of the living. The foregoing similitude shews in a beautiful manner, that God, who could raise the dead, had power to restore them. Abp. Newcome.

The Jews, in the state of their dispersion and captivity, are called the "dead Israelites" in Baruch, chap. iii. 4. And their restoration is described as a "resurrection" by Isaiah, chap. xxvi. 19; at which time "their bones" are said to "flourish," or to be restored to their former strength and vigour, in the same Prophet, chap. lxvi. 14. In like manner St. Paul expresses their conversion by "life from the dead," Rom. xi. 15. W. Lowth.

16. — take thee one stick, and write upon it,] That is, one rod: the expression alludes to Numb. xvii. 2, where Moses is commanded to take twelve rods, one for each tribe, and to write the name of the tribe upon the rod. W. Lowth.

—— For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions:] When Jeroboam, at the head of his companions, withdrew from his obedience to the house of David, the tribes of Benjamin, Judah, and Levi, still adhered to the government of Rehoboam. Besides these three tribes, many Israelites from the other tribes joined themselves to the same party, as appears from 2 Chron. xi. 12—16; xv. 9; xxx. 11, 18. Hence the expression, "for Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions." Calmet.

—— For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all &c.] Upon Reuben's forfeiting his birthright, that privilege was conferred upon the sons of Joseph, of whom Ephraim had the precedence, 1 Chron. v. 1; Gen. xlviii. 20; which caused him to be reckoned the head of the ten tribes. Samaria, the seat of that kingdom, was likewise situated in the tribe of Ephraim, and Jeroboam their first king was an Ephraimite. Upon these accounts the name of Ephraim signifies in the Prophets the whole kingdom of Israel, as distinct from that of Judah. W. Lowth. The union of the two sticks may be supposed to signify in a more extended sense, the assembling, not only of the Jews of all the tribes, but also of the people of all nations in the Church of Christ. Calmet.

19. — which is in the hand of Ephraim,] Which is wielded as a sceptre in the hand of Ephraim, and of the other nine tribes of Israel, the companions of their chief tribe Ephraim. Abp. Newcome.

—— they shall be one in mine hand.] I will make them one nation, and appoint one King to rule over them, the Messiah; see ver. 22. W. Lowth.

This prophecy was fulfilled very imperfectly in the persons of the Jews after the captivity, both because neither the tribe of Judah, nor the other tribes, returned entire, and because they were not governed by kings of the family of David. Calmet.

22. And I will make them one nation &c.] And I will unite My Church all the world over in one: and one King, even the Messiah, whom I shall send, shall be King to them all; and they shall no more be so divided in profession, as if they were different kingdoms, ruled by divers sovereigns, but in the main substance of religion shall be one. Bp. Hall.

—— and one king shall be king to them all:] The Messiah is described as King of the Jews in most of the prophecies of the Old Testament, beginning with that of Genesis, chap. xlix. 10, concerning Shiloh. From David's time He is commonly spoken of as the Person in whom the promises relating to the perpetuity of David's kingdom were to be accomplished. This was a truth unanimously owned by the Jews; see John i. 49; to which our neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all:

23 Neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: but I will save them out of all their dwellingplaces, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God.

[b] Isai. 40. 11. Jer. 23. 5. & 30. 9. ch. 34. 23.

24 And [b] David my servant shall be king over them; and they all shall have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them.

25 And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever: and my servant David shall be their prince for ever.

[c] Ps. 89. 3. ch. 34. 25.

26 Moreover I will make a [c] covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my [d] sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore.

Saviour bore testimony before Pontius Pilate, when the question being put to Him, "Art thou a king?" He made answer, "Thou sayest," (the truth,) "that I am a King." St. Paul, alluding to these words, calls them "a good confession," 1 Tim. vi. 13. The same truth Pontius Pilate himself asserted in that inscription, which by the direction of Providence he ordered to be written upon the cross; see John xix. 19: so that the chief priests impiously renounced their own avowed principles, when they told Pilate, that they had no king but Cesar. W. Lowth.

23. — nor with their detestable things,] Or "abominations," as the word is elsewhere translated, and commonly applied to idols: see chap. xx. 7; 2 Kings xxiii. 13. W. Lowth.

—— out of all their dwellingplaces, wherein &c.] See chap. xxxvi. 20, 25, 28.

26. — and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them &c.] I will set My Church in the midst of them, which shall continue to the end of the world; and I will dwell in their hearts as in My temple for ever. Bp. Hall.

If we understand "for evermore" in a limited sense, and the condition of obedience implied, the rebuilding of the temple may be in the first instance foretold. At the final restoration of the Jews, God will place His tabernacle and sanctuary among them in a larger sense. Abp. Newcome.

28. And the heathen shall know] The conversion of the Jewish nation, and their being restored to their former state of favour and acceptance with God, will be a work of Providence taken notice of by the heathens themselves, who shall join themselves to the Jews, as the Church of God and temple of truth: see chap. xxxvi. 23. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXXVIII. ver. 2. — set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog,] Or, of the land of Magog. Magog is reckoned among the sons of Japhet: see Gen. x. 2: and Ezekiel here uses Magog as the country of which Gog was prince. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

It has been the subject of much discussion amongst the learned, what is the meaning of this remarkable prophecy; who is designed under the name of Gog; and to what period of history the fulfilment of it belongs. On the one hand it has been thought, that the whole prophecy received its completion in the Jewish Church in the times succeeding the Babylonish captivity; that by Gog is designed Antiochus Epiphanes; and that the deliverances predicted to the Church are those which occurred in the times of the Maccabees. On the other hand, it is believed that the prophecy is to be referred to some period of the Christian Church, either past, or yet to come; that by Gog are either represented generally the enemies of the Christian Church, who have been discomfited by the superintending providence of God; or some particular enemies, who were to arise at some future period, either of the conversion of the Jews to Christianity, or, as some suppose, of their restoration to their own land; or, as others maintain, of a second advent of the Messiah to reign personally on earth. Amidst this great variety of opinions, on a subject of so great difficulty and obscurity, it is best to maintain a cautious reserve in forming a decision, and to wait for that clearer light which Providence may hereafter vouchsafe to us, in the full development of the whole scheme of Scriptural prophecies. Pole's Syn. Crit.

The other Prophets speak of some future enemy of the Jews and the Church under a similar description. But in what manner this magnificent prophecy is to receive its completion, time only can explain. Dr. Gray.

—— the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal,] The king or head of those northern nations which lie upon the Euxine sea, and border upon mount Caucasus. See note on chap. xxvii. 13. W. Lowth.

4. — and put hooks into thy jaws,] See chap. xxix. 4. It is an allusion to the manner of taking the crocodile. See Bp. Lowth's note on Isai. xxxvii. 29. I will disappoint all thy designs. W. Lowth.

—— and I will bring thee forth,] The sense would be plainer, if the words were thus translated, "after I have brought thee forth, &c.;" in which sense the copulative, here translated "and," is sometimes used. W. Lowth.

5. Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya] Their allies, Ethiopia and Libya, are called Cush and Phut in the Hebrew; and are joined together as allies, chap. xxx. 5. Persians are joined in like manner with Africans, chap. xxvii. 10. W. Lowth.

7 Be thou prepared, and prepare for thyself, thou, and all thy company that are assembled unto thee, and be thou a guard unto them.

8 ¶ After many days thou shalt be visited: in the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste: but it is brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely all of them.

9 Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands, and many people with thee.

10 Thus saith the Lord GOD; It shall also come to pass, that at the same time shall things come into thy mind, and thou shalt ‖ think an evil thought:

‖ Or. conceive a mischievous purpose.

† Heb. To spoil the spoil, and to prey the prey.

12 † To take a spoil, and to take a prey; to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the † midst of the land.

13 Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?

14 ¶ Therefore, son of man, prophesy and say unto Gog, Thus saith the Lord GOD; In that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it?

15 And thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army:

16 And thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land, that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes.

17 Thus saith the Lord GOD; Art thou he of whom I have spoken in old time † by my servants the prophets of Israel, which prophesied in those days many years that I would bring thee against them?

† Heb. by the hands.

18 And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord GOD, that my fury shall come up in my face.

—— all of them with shield and helmet:] The Libyans, or people of Phut, are described in Jer. xlvi. 9, as "handling the shield;" and Xenophon relates of them, that they were remarkable for their great and large shields. W. Lowth.

6. Gomer,] The most ancient Celts, who were perhaps originally situated on the confines of Europe and Asia. Cimmerians; a very old and celebrated people, who inhabited the peninsula of Crim Tartary. Michaelis. Gomer is joined with Magog, Gen. x. 2. W. Lowth.

—— Togarmah of the north quarters,] Cappadocians. See note on chap. xxvii. 14. Abp. Newcome. In the Scripture language, the quarters of the north mean the provinces to the north of Mesopotamia; and even Chaldea, Mesopotamia, Syria, and Babylon. Calmet.

7. — and be thou a guard unto them.] Do thou be their chief, or leader. Calmet. Let them rely upon thy prowess and conduct as their leader. W. Lowth.

8. — thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword,] The "land" is often put for those who inhabit it: compare Jer. xxxi. 2. The land therefore that is brought back from the sword must mean, those who should survive after the hardships they had suffered in their several dispersions, and the judgment that should fall upon the disobedient in their return home. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

11. And thou shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; &c.] I will go up to a land that is easily invaded and overrun, as that which consists of unwalled villages, not able to bear out an assault: I will go to a secure people, that dwell as they think safely in the confidence of the strength and number of the inhabitants. Bp. Hall.

13 Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish,] These were great traders. See notes at chap. xxvii. 12, 15, 20, 22. These merchants, as soon as they heard of this intended invasion, came into Gog's camp, as to a market, to buy both persons and goods which should come into the conqueror's power. W. Lowth.

—— with all the young lions thereof,] Meaning, probably, their chief merchants, who are described as so many princes, Isai. xxiii. 8, and are called "lions," because of the injustice and oppression they commonly practised in their commerce. W. Lowth.

15. — out of the north parts,] See ver. 6, and note.

17. — Art thou he] Art thou not he? A sense which the particle of interrogation often imports. See the note on chap. xx. 4. W. Lowth.

—— of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants &c.] The enemy, here said to be foretold of old by the Prophets, is probably described under the names of such nations as were the chief enemies to the Jews in the particular times of each Prophet. To particular prophecies of this nature we may add those prophecies which speak of some great and general destruction of God's enemies before the day of judgment, or consummation of all things: such are Ps. cx. 5, 6; Isai. xxvi. 20, 21; xxxiv. 1; Jer. xxx. 7, 10; Joel iii. 9, 14; Obad. ver. 15. W. Lowth.

18. — my fury shall come up in my face.] An expression taken from human passions, which cause the blood to fly up into the face. So Isaiah (chap. xxx. 27.) describes Almighty God as "burning with anger," His lips being "full of indignation, and His tongue as a devouring fire." W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 587.

‖ Or, towers, or, stairs.

21 And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord GOD: every man's sword shall be against his brother.

22 And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone.

19. — a great shaking] All the circumstances of an earthquake are described in this and the following verse: compare Zech. xiv. 3—5. Houbigant.

The Prophets often describe God's judgments upon particular countries or persons, as if it were a dissolution of the whole world. See Isai. xiii. 10. W. Lowth.

21. And I will call for a sword against him] I will appoint a sword to destroy him. So God is said to call for a dearth upon the land of Canaan, Ps. cv. 16. W. Lowth.

22. And I will plead against him] Or, I will plead with him: see chap. xx. 35. God pleads with men by His judgments, which are a manifest token of the vengeance due to their sins: see Isai. lxvi. 16; Jer. xxv. 31. Pestilence is joined with blood here, as it is chap. v. 17; xiv. 19; xxviii. 23. W. Lowth.

—— and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, &c.] Compare Rev. xx. 8, 9. It is plain that the extraordinary circumstances mentioned ver. 19—22, remain to be accomplished on the future enemies of the Jews, when God's people are reinstated in His favour. Abp. Newcome.

Chap. XXXIX. ver. 2. — and will cause thee to come up from the north parts,] The words may be better translated, "after I have caused thee to come up, &c." See a like construction, chap. xxxviii. 4. W. Lowth.

6. And I will send a fire on Magog,] Fire is among the fiercest of God's judgments: see chap. xxx. 8, and note. Magog is the land of Gog. W. Lowth.

—— and among them that dwell carelessly in the isles:] In the maritime regions, bordering perhaps on the Mediterranean: see chap. xxxviii. 13. Abp. Newcome. All countries lying upon the seacoast are called islands in the Hebrew language. W. Lowth.

7. — and I will not let them pollute my holy name any more:] The words of the Hebrew run thus; I will not pollute My holy name any more; that is, I will not suffer it to be polluted by seeming to desert My people: see chap. xiv. 9, and note. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

9. — seven years:] Meaning perhaps generally, "many years." The Hebrews frequently so use the number "seven." Grotius.

The same is called "the East sea," chap. xlvii. 18, to distinguish it from the Mediterranean, called "the Great sea westward," Josh. xxiii. 4. The valley near this lake is called "the valley of the passengers," because it was a great road, by which the merchants and traders from Syria and other Eastern countries went into Egypt. *W. Chap. XL. The following obscure vision of Ezekiel is generally supposed to contain the description of a temple, corresponding in its structure and dimensions with that of Solomon. The Prophet, by presenting to the captives this delineation of what had been "the desire of their eyes," reminded them of the loss which they had suffered from their unrighteousness, and furnished them with a model, upon which the temple might rise again from its ruins; as it did, with less magnificence indeed, in the time of Zerubbabel. Under the particulars detailed by Ezekiel, however, we often discover the economy of a spiritual temple, which should again be filled with "the glory of the Lord coming from the east;" see chap. xliii. 2, 4. Dr. Gray.

This concluding vision of a new city and temple was shown to Ezekiel at the close of his ministry, for the consolation of his brethren, who were then commemorating by the waters of Babylon with sighs and tears the fate of their former city and temple with all its glory, which had that day been extinguished just fourteen years. The restoration of the temple and its service, here circumstantially insisted on, was well calculated to raise their drooping spirits, and renew their trust and confidence in the God of their fathers; and that the rather in their present situation, as they would then naturally refer all those benefits to themselves in their own persons, and expect that they were to be the immediate consequence of a redemption from the captivity they then laboured under. But the Spirit of God, as in other prophecies on the same occasion, looked to a period beyond that event, which then became evident when the Jews were restored to their land, and the second temple was completed. For neither the extent and magnificence of the building, nor the privileges and ministry of that temple, did by any means correspond to this representation; and, in the glory of the Divine presence, it was entirely deficient: whereas the Prophet here tells us, "The Spirit took me, and brought me into the inner court; and, behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house." He adds further, "and I heard Him speaking unto me out of the house; and He said unto me, The place of My throne, and the place of the soles of My feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever," chap. xliii. 5—7; which last circumstance of perpetual duration could not belong to any temple under the Mosaick economy, but is the peculiar attribute of that nobler dispensation to which it led. Such an interpretation of this mystical vision is agreeable to the usage of the Prophets, who speak of the future dispensation under the image of a temple or city; see Isai. ii. 2; and Zech. vi. 12, 13. At the conclusion of this very vision we are told, that the name of the city should be, "The Lord is there," chap. xlviii. 35: a name of the same import with that given by Jeremiah to the city of Christ, "The Lord our righteousness," Jer. xxxiii. 16. The whole vision, whatever difficulties there may be in the explication of particular parts, must be considered as a mystical representation of the Messiah's government. On this general application, that there should still be partial difficulties, is exactly what ought to be expected: neither will those difficulties entirely vanish, till the whole scheme is completed; for the true and accurate interpretation of all prophecy is only to be had from the accomplishment. Bp. Bagot.

Ver. 1. —in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month,] That is, the first month, called here the beginning of the year, which in the ecclesiastical computation was the month Nisan. W. Lowth. See the notes on Exod. xii. 2; xiii. 4.

—— the fourteenth year] See chap. i. 1, 2; the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in which Jerusalem was taken, was also the eleventh year of Jehoiachin's captivity, from which the Prophet dates; and therefore the twenty-fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity was the fourteenth year after the taking of Jerusalem. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

2. —and set me upon a very high mountain,] The expression points out mount Moriah, upon which the temple was built. W. Lowth, Calmet. This mountain was not however very high; and Michaelis remarks, that the expression probably signifies nothing more than that Jerusalem, and the true worship of God, should be very much exalted, and made known to all the world. Abp. Newcome. In this respect the expression represents the Christian Church; see Isai. ii. 1, 2. W. Lowth.

—— by which was as the frame of a city on the south.] Upon which; see the margin. If we suppose the Prophet brought by the Spirit from Chaldea into the land of Israel, both the temple and the city would be to the south. It appears from chap. xlviii. 15, &c. that he had a view of the holy city which was to be restored as well as of the temple. W. Lowth, Calmet.

5 And behold a wall on the outside of the house round about, and in the man's hand a measuring reed of six cubits long by the cubit and an hand breadth: so he measured the breadth of the building, one reed; and the height, one reed.

† Heb. whose face was the way toward the east.

6 ¶ Then came he unto the gate † which looketh toward the east, and went up the stairs thereof, and measured the threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad; and the other threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad.

7 And every little chamber was one reed long, and one reed broad; and between the little chambers were five cubits; and the threshold of the gate by the porch of the gate within was one reed.

8 He measured also the porch of the gate within, one reed.

9 Then measured he the porch of the gate, eight cubits; and the posts thereof, two cubits; and the porch of the gate was inward.

10 And the little chambers of the gate eastward were three on this side, and three on that side; they three were of one measure: and the posts had one measure on this side and on that side.

11 And he measured the breadth of the entry of the gate, ten cubits; and the length of the gate, thirteen cubits.

† Heb. limit, or, bound.

12 The † space also before the little chambers was one cubit on this side, and the space was one cubit on that side: and the little chambers were six cubits on this side, and six cubits on that side.

13 He measured then the gate from the roof of one little chamber to the roof of another: the breadth was five and twenty cubits, door against door.

Before CHRIST 574.

14 He made also posts of threescore cubits, even unto the post of the court round about the gate.

15 And from the face of the gate of the entrance unto the face of the porch of the inner gate were fifty cubits.

16 And there were † narrow windows to the little chambers, and to their posts within the gate round about, and likewise to the ‖ arches: and windows were round about ‖ inward: and upon each post were palm trees.

17 Then brought he me into the outward court, and, lo, there were chambers, and a pavement made for the court round about: thirty chambers were upon the pavement.

18 And the pavement by the side of the gates over against the length of the gates was the lower pavement.

19 Then he measured the breadth from the forefront of the lower gate unto the forefront of the inner court ‖ without, an hundred cubits eastward and northward.

‖ Or, from without.

20 ¶ And the gate of the outward court † that looked toward the north, he measured the length thereof, and the breadth thereof.

† Heb. whose face was.

21 And the little chambers thereof were three on this side and three on that side; and the posts thereof and the ‖ arches thereof were after the measure of the first gate: the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

model by which they should rebuild it at their return from captivity. The Jewish writers confirm this opinion when they tell us, "that the children of the captivity, when they returned from Babylon, followed the platform of that temple which Ezekiel described, as far as their circumstances would allow." Dr. Lightfoot, W. Lowth.

5. And behold a wall on the outside of the house round about,] A wall went round the whole plain surface of the holy mountain like a parapet. Calmet.

—— by the cubit and an hand breadth:] Each cubit containing a cubit and a hand breadth, called the "great cubit," chap. xli. 8; and supposed equal to half a yard. The cubit used in Chaldea, where the Prophet lived, was five hand breadths. Bp. Cumberland.

—— of the building,] Of the outer wall; it was three yards high and three yards broad. This wall served as a security against the precipices of the mount on which the temple stood. Abp. Newcome. And it separated the holy ground from that which was profane. W. Lowth.

6. Then came he &c.] After having passed the court of the Gentiles, he came to the eastern gate of the court of Israel. Abp. Newcome.

11. — and the length of the gate,] By this some understand the height of the gate. Houbigant renders it, "and the length of the entry of the gate." W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

14. He made also posts of threescore cubits,] The angel described the height of the columns or pillars which were to support the rooms or stories over the arch of the gate, and these were in height sixty cubits; the whole building being divided into three stories like those described, chap. xlii. 6. Calmet.

16. And there were narrow windows] These windows were narrow without, but broad within to disperse the light. The margin of our Bibles thus explains it, and refers to 1 Kings vi. 4. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

—— and likewise to the arches:] The word here rendered "arch," sometimes signifies a porch or entrance. W. Lowth. See the margin.

east; and they went up unto it by seven steps; and the arches thereof were before them.

23 And the gate of the inner court was over against the gate toward the north, and toward the east; and he measured from gate to gate an hundred cubits.

24 ¶ After that he brought me toward the south, and behold a gate toward the south: and he measured the posts thereof and the arches thereof according to these measures.

25 And there were windows in it and in the arches thereof round about, like those windows: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

26 And there were seven steps to go up to it, and the arches thereof were before them: and it had palm trees, one on this side, and another on that side, upon the posts thereof.

27 And there was a gate in the inner court toward the south: and he measured from gate to gate toward the south an hundred cubits.

28 And he brought me to the inner court by the south gate: and he measured the south gate according to these measures;

29 And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, according to these measures: and there were windows in it and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

30 And the arches round about were five and twenty cubits long, and five cubits † broad.

† Heb. breadth.

31 And the arches thereof were toward the utter court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof: and the going up to it had eight steps.

32 ¶ And he brought me into the inner court toward the east: and he measured the gate according to these measures.

33 And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, were according to these measures: and there were windows therein and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

Before CHRIST 574.

34 And the arches thereof were toward the outward court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

35 ¶ And he brought me to the north gate, and measured it according to these measures;

36 The little chambers thereof, the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, and the windows to it round about: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

37 And the posts thereof were toward the utter court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

38 And the chambers and the entries thereof were by the posts of the gates, where they washed the burnt offering.

39 ¶ And in the porch of the gate were two tables on this side, and two tables on that side, to slay thereon the burnt offering and the sin offering and the trespass offering.

40 And at the side without, ‖ as one goeth up to the entry of the north gate, were two tables; and on the other side, which was at the porch of the gate, were two tables.

41 Four tables were on this side, and four tables on that side, by the side of the gate; eight tables, whereupon they slew their sacrifices.

42 And the four tables were of hewn stone for the burnt offering, of a cubit and an half long, and a cubit and an half broad, and one cubit high: whereupon also they laid the instruments wherewith they slew the burnt offering and the sacrifice.

43 And within were ‖ hooks, an hand broad, fastened round about: and upon the tables was the flesh of the offering.

23. And the gate of the inner court was over against the gate toward the north, and toward the east;] The expression is elliptical, and means, that the north gate of the inner court did exactly answer this north gate of the outer court described ver. 20, 22, in like manner as the east gate of the inner court answered the east gate of the outer court. W. Lowth.

30. — five and twenty cubits long, and five cubits broad.] Length seems here to be taken for height, as before, ver. 11. W. Lowth.

46 And the chamber whose prospect is toward the north is for the priests, the keepers of the charge of the altar: these are the sons of Zadok among the sons of Levi, which come near to the LORD to minister unto him.

47 So he measured the court, an hundred cubits long, and an hundred cubits broad, foursquare; and the altar that was before the house.

48 ¶ And he brought me to the porch of the house, and measured each post of the porch, five cubits on this side, and five cubits on that side: and the breadth of the gate was three cubits on this side, and three cubits on that side.

49 The length of the porch was twenty cubits, and the breadth eleven cubits; and he brought me by the steps whereby they went up to it: and there were pillars by the posts, one on this side, and another on that side.

CHAP. XLI.

The measures, parts, chambers, and ornaments of the temple.

AFTERWARD he brought me to the temple, and measured the posts, six cubits broad on the one side, and six cubits broad on the other side, which was the breadth of the tabernacle.

2 And the breadth of the ‖ door was ten cubits; and the sides of the door were five cubits on the one side, and five cubits on the other side: and he measured the length thereof, forty cubits: and the breadth, twenty cubits.

Before CHRIST 574.

3 Then went he inward, and measured the post of the door, two cubits; and the door, six cubits; and the breadth of the door, seven cubits.

4 So he measured the length thereof, twenty cubits; and the breadth, twenty cubits, before the temple: and he said unto me, This is the most holy place.

5 After he measured the wall of the house, six cubits; and the breadth of every side chamber, four cubits, round about the house on every side.

6 And the side chambers were three, † one over another, and ‖ thirty in order; and they entered into the wall which was of the house for the side chambers round about, that they might † have hold, but they had not hold in the wall of the house.

† Heb. it was made broader, and went round.

8 I saw also the height of the house round about: the foundations of the side chambers were a full reed of six great cubits.

9 The thickness of the wall, which was for the side chamber without, was five cubits: and that which was left was the place of the side chambers that were within.

11 And the doors of the side chambers were toward the place that was left, one door toward the north, and another door toward

45. — This chamber, — is for the priests,] The word "chamber" is put here for a suite of chambers. The wing or row of buildings on the north side of the inner court was destined for the use of the priests, who were in constant attendance according to their courses upon the service of the temple; see Numb. xviii. 5; 1 Chron. vi. 49; 2 Chron. xiii. 11. Calmet, W. Lowth.

46. And the chamber whose prospect is toward the north] Another wing or row of chambers on the south side of the inner court is for the descendants of the family of Aaron, whose office it is to attend upon the service of the altar, and keep the fire burning thereon perpetually, Lev. vi. 12, 13. W. Lowth.

47. — and the altar that was before the house.] The altar stood in the inner court, just before the porch that entered into the temple. W. Lowth.

Chap. XLI. ver. 1. — which was the breadth of the tabernacle.] See Exod. xxvi. 16, 22, 23.

12 Now the building that was before the separate place at the end toward the west was seventy cubits broad; and the wall of the building was five cubits thick round about, and the length thereof ninety cubits.

13 So he measured the house, an hundred cubits long; and the separate place, and the building, with the walls thereof, an hundred cubits long;

14 Also the breadth of the face of the house, and of the separate place toward the east, an hundred cubits.

15 And he measured the length of the building over against the separate place which was behind it, and the ‖ galleries thereof on the one side and on the other side, an hundred cubits, with the inner temple, and the porches of the court;

22 The altar of wood was three cubits high, and the length thereof two cubits; and the corners thereof, and the length thereof, and the walls thereof, were of wood: and he said unto me, This is the table that is before the LORD.

23 And the temple and the sanctuary had two doors.

24 And the doors had two leaves apiece, two turning leaves; two leaves for the one door, and two leaves for the other door.

25 And there were made on them, on the doors of the temple, cherubims and palm trees, like as were made upon the walls; and there were thick planks upon the face of the porch without.

26 And there were narrow windows and palm trees on the one side and on the other side, on the sides of the porch, and upon the side chambers of the house, and thick planks.

THEN he brought me forth into the utter court, the way toward the north: and he brought me into the chamber that was over against the separate place, and which was before the building toward the north.

2 Before the length of an hundred cubits was the north door, and the breadth was fifty cubits.

3 Over against the twenty cubits which were for the inner court, and over against the pavement which was for the utter court, was gallery against gallery in three stories.

4 And before the chambers was a walk of ten cubits breadth inward, a way of one cubit; and their doors toward the north.

12. — the separate place] By this most understand the temple proper. Abp. Newcome.

14. — the breadth of the face of the house,] The whole temple with the porch and walls was a hundred cubits in length westward. W. Lowth.

15. And he measured the length of the building over against the separate place which was behind it,] Noldius translates this sentence more clearly thus; "And he measured the length of the building which was before the separate place, and that which was behind it." Abp. Newcome. The east and west sides having been measured before, the north and south sides are here represented as measuring each an hundred cubits. W. Lowth.

16. — and the windows were covered;] With lattices, or curtains, or both. Abp. Newcome.

18. And it was made with cherubims &c.] On the inside of the house the walls were adorned with carved work of cherubim and palm trees as in Solomon's temple; see 1 Kings vi. 29. W. Lowth.

—— two faces;] Which appeared; the other two (of the ox and the eagle) being supposed below the plain. The cherubim had each four faces; see chap. i, vi. W. Lowth.

22. — the walls thereof,] The sides. W. Lowth.

—— This is the table that is before the Lord.] Compare chap. xliv. 16. The words "altar" and "table" are used promiscuously; see Heb. xiii. 10; where by "altar" the Apostle means "table." Abp. Newcome.

Chap. XLII. ver. 1. — the utter court] Utter with respect to the temple itself; the court of the priests is meant. Houbigant, Abp. Newcome, Calmet.

4. — a way of one cubit;] This some understand of an entrance at each end of the cloister. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST 574.

5 Now the upper chambers were shorter: for the galleries ‖ were higher than these, ‖ than the lower, and than the middlemost of the building.

‖ Or, did eat of these.

6 For they were in three stories, but had not pillars as the pillars of the courts: therefore the building was straitened more than the lowest and the middlemost from the ground.

‖ Or, and the building consisted of the lower and the middlemost.

7 And the wall that was without over against the chambers, toward the utter court on the forepart of the chambers, the length thereof was fifty cubits.

8 For the length of the chambers that were in the utter court was fifty cubits: and, lo, before the temple were an hundred cubits.

9 And ‖ from under these chambers was ‖ the entry on the east side, ‖ as one goeth into them from the utter court.

‖ Or, from the place.

‖ Or, he that brought me.

10 The chambers were in the thickness of the wall of the court toward the east, over against the separate place, and over against the building.

‖ Or, as he came.

11 And the way before them was like the appearance of the chambers which were toward the north, as long as they, and as broad as they: and all their goings out were both according to their fashions, and according to their doors.

12 And according to the doors of the chambers that were toward the south was a door in the head of the way, even the way directly before the wall toward the east, as one entereth into them.

13 ¶ Then said he unto me, The north chambers and the south chambers, which are before the separate place, they be holy chambers, where the priests that approach unto the LORD shall eat the most holy things: there shall they lay the most holy things, and the meat offering, and the sin offering, and the trespass offering; for the place is holy.

Before CHRIST 574.

14 When the priests enter therein, then shall they not go out of the holy place into the utter court, but there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister; for they are holy; and shall put on other garments, and shall approach to those things which are for the people.

15 Now when he had made an end of measuring the inner house, he brought me forth toward the gate whose prospect is toward the east, and measured it round about.

16 He measured the east † side with the measuring reed, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

17 He measured the north side, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

18 He measured the south side, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed.

19 ¶ He turned about to the west side, and measured five hundred reeds with the measuring reed.

20 He measured it by the four sides: it had a wall round about, five hundred reeds long, and five hundred broad, to make a separation between the sanctuary and the profane place.

5. Now the upper chambers were shorter: &c.] The marginal reading is to be preferred; the sense of which is, "for the galleries did abate of these;" that is, took of these more than of the lowest and middlemost part of the building. The reason of this is assigned in the next verse. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

6. — had not pillars] To support the galleries or balconies; the two upper stories had balconies standing out of them, the breadth of which was taken out of the rooms themselves, and this made them so much the narrower, because the weight of the balconies was not supported by pillars, as the rooms over the cloisters of the outward court were, but only by the wall. W. Lowth.

8. — and, lo, before the temple were an hundred cubits.] The angel conducts the Prophet from the north side of the court to the south side, and in passing before the temple he observes the dimensions of the east front; see chap. xli. 14. Calmet, W. Lowth.

10. — in the thickness of the wall] In the breadth of the wall; that is, in the breadth of ground which that wall enclosed. W. Lowth.

11. And the way before them] The alley or way of ten cubits within the chambers; see ver. 4. Calmet.

13. — they be holy chambers,] The shewbread, the remainder of the meat offering, sin offering, and trespass offering, are expressly called the most holy things, Lev. vi. 14, 17; xxiv. 9; Numb. xviii. 9; and are distinguished from the holy things, such as are the peace offerings, first fruits, and tithes, Lev. xxi. 22. These were to be eaten within the precincts of the temple by the same laws. W. Lowth.

14. When the priests enter therein,] Within the inner court, chap. xliv. 17. W. Lowth.

—— then shall they not go out of the holy place into the utter court,] Moses had given the same direction, in saying, that the high priest and the inferiour priests should use their dress of ceremony when they entered into the tabernacle to perform their functions; insinuating thereby, that in other places they should not wear it, Exod. xxviii. 43. Calmet.

15. — the inner house,] The temple itself; compare chap. xli. 15. W. Lowth.

16. He measured the east side with the measuring reed, five hundred reeds,] These are the measures of the holy mountain or area upon which the temple stood; it is an exact square. Capellus is of opinion, that instead of "five hundred reeds," we ought to read "five hundred cubits;" and this reading is supported by the Septuagint, by St. Jerome, by the Jewish authors themselves, by all the interpreters, and by the actual size of the holy mountain. The smaller cubit is probably here intended. Calmet.

20. — it had a wall round about,] This was the outermost wall, to defend it from being invaded or profaned; compare Rev. xxi. 17. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

—— between the sanctuary and the profane place.] By the "sanctuary" is here meant, the whole compass of ground which was the precincts of the temple, elsewhere called the "holy mountain;" see chap. xliii. 12; in comparison of which Jerusalem itself, though upon several accounts styled "the holy city," was esteemed but as profane or unconsecrated ground; see chap. xlviii. 15. W. Lowth.

5 So the spirit took me up, and brought me into the inner court; and, behold, the glory of the LORD filled the house.

6 And I heard him speaking unto me out of the house; and the man stood by me.

7 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever, and my holy name, shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredom, nor by the carcases of their kings in their high places.

Before CHRIST 574.

8 In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds, and their post by my posts, ‖ and the wall between me and them, they have even defiled my holy name by their abominations that they have committed: wherefore I have consumed them in mine anger.

‖ Or, for there was but a wall between me and them.

9 Now let them put away their whoredom, and the carcases of their kings, far from me, and I will dwell in the midst of them for ever.

10 ¶ Thou son of man, shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities: and let them measure the ‖ pattern.

‖ Or, sum, or, number.

11 And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, shew them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the laws thereof: and write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them.

12 This is the law of the house; Upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house.

Chap. XLIII. ver. 2. — came from the way of the east:] It had removed thither, chap. xi. 23, and was now returning. Abp. Secker. The glory of the Lord, when it forsook the temple, is described as departing from the eastern gate of it, chap. x. 19; afterwards it is represented as quite forsaking the city, and removing to a mountain on the east side of the city, chap. xi. 23. W. Lowth.

3. — when I came to destroy the city:] When I was transported in vision to Jerusalem, to foretell the destruction of the city. Calmet. See the note on Jer. i. 10.

4. — came into the house] To shew that God would again accept that place and its sacred rites, and afford the Jews His protection. Grotius.

5. — and, behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house.] The glory, or the symbol of the Divine presence, entered into the temple and settled there, as it did when it was finished by Solomon, 1 Kings viii. 10, 11. W. Lowth.

7. — the place of my throne, &c.] Here is the place of My throne, &c. The cherubim were God's throne, from whence He is said to sit between the cherubim, and the ark was His footstool, Ps. xcix. 1, 5. Calmet, W. Lowth.

—— where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever,] See Ps. lxviii. 16. This promise is to be understood like those formerly made upon the condition of their obedience, but it is eminently fulfilled in Christ, in whom all the prophecies of the Old Testament are to have their final accomplishment. Zechariah prophesies of the Messiah, chap. vi. 13, that "He should build the temple of the Lord, and bear the glory;" that is, He shall build the Christian Church; "in Him shall all the fulness of the Godhead dwell bodily," and really, not in types and figures; see Heb. iii. 3; Matt. xvi. 18; John i. 14; Col. ii. 9. There was no visible shechinah or glory in the second temple, till the Lord, whom they expected, "came to His temple," Mal. iii. 1; that is, till the Messiah, who was "the brightness of His Father's glory," appeared there, and made it an illustrious figure of that true church or temple of believers, where He would continue His presence for ever, 2 Cor. vi. 16. W. Lowth, Bp. Hall.

—— by the carcases of their kings in their high places.] By the idols set up by their kings in the high places, Jer. xvi. 18. W. Lowth. We may understand by "carcases," bodies offered to idols. Bp. Hall.

8. In their setting of] See 2 Kings xvi. 14; xxi. 4, 5, 7.

—— and the wall between me and them,] The sense in the margin is better, "for there was but a wall between Me and them." W. Lowth.

10, 11. — shew the house to the house of Israel,] It was indeed a model for them to imitate, as far as they were able; but we may probably suppose, that the words may have a further view and import; that the model of God's temple here set forth, is but a pattern of heavenly things, and a type of that pure church, "built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone;" which we may hope God may in due time every where restore. W. Lowth.

12. — of the mountain] Mount Moriah, upon which the temple stood. W. Lowth.

We learn from Josephus, that the Asmonean princes built a tower close to the north side of the mount, which became famous toward the close of the Jewish history, under the name of the Tower Antonia. This was a profanation of the holy ground. Calmet.

19 And thou shalt give to the priests the Levites that be of the seed of Zadok, which approach unto me, to minister unto me, saith the Lord GOD, a young bullock for a sin offering.

20 And thou shalt take of the blood thereof, and put it on the four horns of it, and on the four corners of the settle, and upon the border round about: thus shalt thou cleanse and purge it.

Before CHRIST 574.

21 Thou shalt take the bullock also of the sin offering, and he shall burn it in the appointed place of the house, without the sanctuary.

22 And on the second day thou shalt offer a kid of the goats without blemish for a sin offering; and they shall cleanse the altar, as they did cleanse it with the bullock.

23 When thou hast made an end of cleansing it, thou shalt offer a young bullock without blemish, and a ram out of the flock without blemish.

24 And thou shalt offer them before the LORD, and the priests shall cast salt upon them, and they shall offer them up for a burnt offering unto the LORD.

25 Seven days shalt thou prepare every day a goat for a sin offering: they shall also prepare a young bullock, and a ram out of the flock, without blemish.

26 Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it; and they shall † consecrate themselves.

† Heb. fill their hands.

THEN he brought me back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary

---

—— the higher place] In the Hebrew, "the back of the altar," which imports that this base was the protuberance, or the widest part of it. W. Lowth, Houbigant.

14. And from the bottom upon the ground even to the lower settle] The "settle" means the imbenching or narrowing; the altar was made narrower as it came nearer to the top. On this lower settle or ledge the priests walked round the altar. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

15. —four horns.] One at each corner; see Exod. xxvii. 2. They arose from the uppermost bench, where the priest stood to officiate. W. Lowth.

In two ancient Egyptian pictures, taken from the ruins of Herculaneum, are representations of altars, having at each of their four corners a rising, which continues square to about half its height, but from thence is gradually sloped off to an edge or a point. It is likely that these are "the horns of the altar" alluded to in Scripture; and probably this is their true figure; see Ps. cxviii. 27. To retain the victim was perhaps the primary use of these horns. Fragments to Calmet.

17. —stairs] See Exod. xx. 26. It was an inclined plane; God forbade His priests to go up by steps to His altar. The ascent up to the altar was by a gentle rising, which was thirty-two cubits in length, and sixteen in breadth, and landed (for the convenience of the priests who went up to sacrifice) upon the upper ledge or settle next the hearth, or the top of the altar. Dean Prideaux.

18. —These are the ordinances of the altar] At the dedication, before the ordinary sacrifices are made. Calmet.

21. —without the sanctuary.] In some place appointed for that purpose within the precincts of the holy mountain. The temple itself is called the "inner house," chap. xli. 15; xlii. 15; to distinguish it from the outer court and precincts thereof. The body of the bullock, whose blood was to sanctify the altar, was to be burnt without the camp, by order of the law, Exod. xxix. 14. W. Lowth, Calmet.

22. —a kid of the goats] This is over and above the sacrifices of consecration prescribed, Exod. xxix. 1. W. Lowth.

23. —a ram out of the flock] Called the "ram of consecration," Exod. xxix. 31; Lev. viii. 22. W. Lowth.

24. —shall cast salt] Upon the victims, according to the law in Lev. ii. 13. W. Lowth.

26. Seven days] See Exod. xxix. 35; Lev. viii. 33.

——and they shall consecrate themselves.] The expression in the original is, "they shall fill their hands." The priests were consecrated to their office partly by the act of filling their hands with what they were to offer, Exod. xxix. 24. Calmet, W. Lowth.

Chap. XLIV. ver. 1. —of the outward sanctuary] In opposition to the temple itself, which was the inner sanctuary. This was called the outward sanctuary, because none but priests entered into it. The gate is to be understood of the inner gate, which immediately communicated with the court of the priests. Houbigant.

3. It is for the prince;] Solomon placed his seat at the entrance into the inner court before the altar of the Lord, 2 Chron. vi. 13; and here the prince seems to have had his place in aftertimes, whenever he came to worship in the temple, 2 Chron. xxiii. 13; xxxiv. 31. Not far from which place a seat was placed for the high priest, as may be gathered from Eli's seat, 1 Sam. i. 9; and from whence the high priest pronounced the blessing after the service was ended; see Ecclus. l. 20. W. Lowth, Dr. Lightfoot.

——— to eat bread before the Lord;] To eat part of the peace offerings, chap. xlvi. 2. Bread stands for all sorts of entertainment; see Gen. xliii. 31; and particularly for a religious feast, made of the remainder of a sacrifice, Gen. xxxi. 54. W. Lowth.

5. — mark well the entering in of the house, with every going forth &c.] Suffer none that are unqualified to enter upon God's service there. W. Lowth. In the Hebrew idiom, the comings in and the goings out often signify all the conduct, the actions, and the habits of a person. Calmet.

7. — strangers, uncircumcised in heart, and uncircumcised in flesh,] In that you have ordained and appointed those to be priests in My sanctuary that are strangers both in blood and in religion; and have given them a place of ministration in My temple to pollute it. Bp. Hall. See Acts xxi. 28, where St. Paul is accused by the Jews of violating the temple, by introducing Gentiles into it. Calmet.

——— the fat and the blood,] These were peculiarly appropriated to God; see Lev. iii. 16; xvii. 11. W. Lowth.

9. — No stranger; — shall enter into my sanctuary,] We learn from Josephus, that on certain extraordinary occasions strangers have been admitted since the captivity into the court of the priests, but they have never consented to the admission of any one into the sanctuary. Ptolemy Philopator in vain endeavoured to penetrate to the holy place; he found the Jews determined to die rather than to permit him. Heliodorus entered as far as the treasure, but he was punished by the hand of angels. Antiochus Epiphanes and Pompey penetrated to the Holy of Holies, but they effected it by a violence which it was impossible for the priests to resist; and nothing upon these occasions appeared more mournful, or more distressing to the Jews, than that the things which they held most sacred should have been discovered and laid open to the Gentiles. Calmet.

10. — the Levites] Many of the priests and Levites lived to see the second temple, Ezra iii. 12; but the descendants of former idolatrous priests and Levites may be meant. Abp. Newcome. The Levites, who were priests, are here understood. Calmet. They were now to be degraded from attending upon the higher offices belonging to the priesthood, and thrust down to meaner services. W. Lowth.

11. — having charge at the gates &c.] Performing the office of porters, and other servile duties of the inferiour Levites. W. Lowth.

Whatever touched any thing holy, became itself holy, and was no longer to be profaned by vulgar use, Exod. xxx. 29; Lev. vi. 27. The altar sanctifies the gift, Matt. xxiii. 19. What touched the altar or the furniture of the tabernacle was holy; probably what the holy garments touched was so too. Abp. Secker.

20. Neither shall they shave their heads, nor suffer their locks to grow long;] See Lev. xxi. 23. — the holy and profane,] What places, according to the ceremonial law, are holy, and what common; what things are defiled, and what clean. Abp. Newcome.

24. And in controversy they shall stand in judgment;] See Deut. xvii. 8, 9; and the people were to seek the law at their mouths, Mal. ii. 7; that is, to enquire of them the purport and meaning of it. When the supreme judicial power was placed in the Sanhedrim, the majority of that court consisted chiefly of such as had the chief stations among the priests; see Acts iv. 5, 6. W. Lowth.

26. — seven days.] His uncleanness continued for seven days by the law, Numb. xix. 11; and the priests were to reckon to him seven days more, before he was to be admitted into the sanctuary. W. Lowth.

28. — ye shall give them no possession] Their priesthood, their ministry in My sanctuary, and the perquisites thereto belonging, shall be to them instead of lands and cities, of which they shall not have any share as the other tribes; see Deut. x. 9; Josh. xiii. 14. *W. CHAP. XLV.

1 The portion of land for the sanctuary, 6 for the city, 7 and for the prince. 9 Ordinances for the prince.

MOREOVER, † when ye shall divide by lot the land for inheritance, ye shall offer an oblation unto the LORD, † an holy portion of the land: the length shall be the length of five and twenty thousand reeds, and the breadth shall be ten thousand. This shall be holy in all the borders thereof round about.

† Heb. when ye cause the land to fall. † Heb. holiness.

2 Of this there shall be for the sanctuary five hundred in length, with five hundred in breadth, square round about; and fifty cubits round about for the ‖ suburbs thereof.

‖ Or, void places.

3 And of this measure shalt thou measure the length of five and twenty thousand, and the breadth of ten thousand: and in it shall be the sanctuary and the most holy place.

4 The holy portion of the land shall be for the priests the ministers of the sanctuary, which shall come near to minister unto the LORD: and it shall be a place for their houses, and an holy place for the sanctuary.

Before CHRIST 574.

5 And the five and twenty thousand of length, and the ten thousand of breadth, shall also the Levites, the ministers of the house, have for themselves, for a possession for twenty chambers.

6 ¶ And ye shall appoint the possession of the city five thousand broad, and five and twenty thousand long, over against the oblation of the holy portion: it shall be for the whole house of Israel.

7 ¶ And a portion shall be for the prince on the one side and on the other side of the oblation of the holy portion, and of the possession of the city, before the oblation of the holy portion, and before the possession of the city, from the west side westward, and from the east side eastward: and the length shall be over against one of the portions, from the west border unto the east border.

He hath made of blessing those with an extraordinary degree of plenty, who conscientiously pay their tithes and offerings as grateful acknowledgments to God, the Giver of all good things, Prov. iii. 9, 10; Mal. iii. 10; 2 Chron. xxxi. 10. W. Lowth.

31. — dead of itself,] A command given to all the Jews, Exod. xxii. 31; and more particularly to the priests, Lev. xxii. 8. W. Lowth.

Chap. XLV. ver. 1. — by lot] The land was so divided by Joshua in the first partition. W. Lowth.

—— an oblation unto the Lord,] The portion of the Lord is here called an oblation, because it was a sort of firstfruits of the land or soil itself. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

—— five and twenty thousand reeds,] The Hebrew doth not express either reeds or cubits: but many interpreters expound the place of cubits, considering this to be the more probable measure, and concluding cubits to be here meant from the circumstance of their being used in the measurement of the temple in the next verse. Bp. Lowth, Calmet, Michaelis.

4. — a place for their houses,] The houses were for the priests of the four and twenty courses, who were not in their course of waiting. W. Lowth.

—— for the sanctuary.] See chap. xlviii. 10.

5. And the five and twenty thousand of length, &c.] This was another allotment; and some translations render the sense plainer thus: "there shall be other five and twenty thousand," &c. The Levites were very numerous; in the time of David they were reckoned thirty-eight thousand, and therefore as large a piece of ground is allotted to them, as belonged to the temple and the whole priestly order. W. Lowth.

—— for twenty chambers.] According to most commentators, rows of chambers, or ranges of building. The Septuagint reads "cities to inhabit." Such cities as were allotted to them by Moses, Numb. xxxv. 2. W. Lowth.

6. — five thousand broad, and five and twenty thousand long,] These measurements contained an area of about seventeen miles in circuit, which was more than four times the circuit of Jerusalem, according to the account of Josephus. But it was intended for the whole house of Israel; that is, all the tribes upon solemn festivals, and was to have twelve gates according to the number of the tribes of Israel, chap. xlviii. 31. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

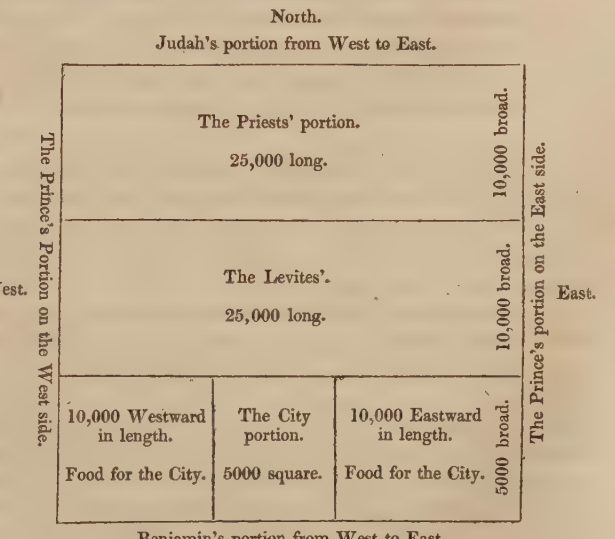
—— over against] Or by the side of; see chap. xlviii. 15. It was to run parallel in length with the holy portion, though but half its breadth; by which means these three portions made an exact square; see chap. xlviii. 20, and the following draught:



W. Lowth.

7. And a portion shall be for the prince &c.] See the plan; it lay parallel to the other three portions from north to south, and on each side. W. Lowth.

—— over against] Answerable to; see chap. xl. 18; it shall be parallel with them both on the east and west side. W. Lowth. And the length of it shall be over against each of these portions, from the west borders of it to the east. Bp. Hall.

Israel: and my princes shall no more oppress my people; and the rest of the land shall they give to the house of Israel according to their tribes.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD; Let it suffice you, O princes of Israel: remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice, take away your † exactions from my people, saith the Lord GOD.

[a] Lev. 19. 35, 36.

10 Ye shall have just [a] balances, and a just ephah, and a just bath.

11 The ephah and the bath shall be of one measure, that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the ephah the tenth part of an homer: the measure thereof shall be after the homer.

[b] Exod. 30. 13. Lev. 27. 25. Numb. 3. 47.

12 And the [b] shekel shall be twenty gerahs: twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh.

13 This is the oblation that ye shall offer; the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of wheat, and ye shall give the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of barley:

14 Concerning the ordinance of oil, the bath of oil, ye shall offer the tenth part of a bath out of the cor, which is an homer of ten baths; for ten baths are an homer:

16 All the people of the land † shall give this oblation ‖ for the prince in Israel.

17 And it shall be the prince's part to give burnt offerings, and meat offerings, and drink offerings, in the feasts, and in the new moons, and in the sabbaths, in all solemnities of the house of Israel: he shall prepare the sin offering, and the meat offering, and the burnt offering, and the ‖ peace offerings, to make reconciliation for the house of Israel.

Before CHRIST 574.

‖ Or, thank offerings.

18 Thus saith the Lord GOD; In the first month, in the first day of the month, thou shalt take a young bullock without blemish, and cleanse the sanctuary:

19 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin offering, and put it upon the posts of the house, and upon the four corners of the settle of the altar, and upon the posts of the gate of the inner court.

20 And so thou shalt do the seventh day of the month for every one that erreth, and for him that is simple: so shall ye reconcile the house.

21 In the first month, in the fourteenth day of the month, ye shall have the passover, a feast of seven days; unleavened bread shall be eaten.

22 And upon that day shall the prince prepare for himself and for all the people of the land a bullock for a sin offering.

23 And seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt offering to the LORD, seven bullocks and seven rams without blemish daily the seven days; and a kid of the goats daily for a sin offering.

10. —just balances,] Lev. xix. 36; Deut. xxv. 15.

11. —of one measure,] The bath for things liquid; the ephah for things dry; the bath containing about seven gallons and a half. Bp. Cumberland.

——of an homer:] The word "homer" here used, is to be distinguished from the "omer," Exod. xvi. 36; which is but the tenth part of an ephah. W. Lowth.

12. And the shekel shall be &c.] See the note at Exod. xxx. 13; where the same number is made the standard of the shekel.

——twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh.] The amount of the three is sixty shekels, which made a maneh or mina, about thirty ounces of silver. We may well suppose that three of the usual current coins among the Jews answered to the three numbers of shekels here mentioned. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth. But we learn from Sir John Chardin, that it is still the custom of the East, in reckoning a sum of money, to specify the different parts of which it is composed. Harmer.

13. This is the oblation &c.] The portion belonging to the Levites out of the fruits of the earth, when they were gathered in; see chap. xliv. 30. W. Lowth.

——the sixth part of an ephah of an homer] The sixtieth part of the whole. Abp. Newcome.

14. —out of the cor,] Which is equal to the homer, as is here expressed.

15. And one lamb out of the flock, &c.] This offering is besides the firstborn set apart for the use of the priests and Levites, Numb. xviii. 15. It is for the daily burnt offering, Numb. xxviii. 3; or for burnt offerings and peace offerings, or sacrifices of thanksgivings that were to be made upon proper occasions, chap. xliii. 27. W. Lowth.

——for a meat offering,] See ver. 13, 14. The meat offering, or more properly the bread offering, was made of fine flour mingled with oil, Lev. ii. 5, 6. W. Lowth.

——to make reconciliation] This effect is attributed to burnt offerings, as well as to those which are properly sacrifices for sin, Lev. i. 4. W. Lowth.

16. —for the prince] The marginal reading is "with the prince," which agrees better with the sense. The prince shall join with the people in making the oblations already mentioned; but those in the next verse are to be at the exclusive charge of the prince. W. Lowth.

17. —he shall prepare] That is, provide.

18. —In the first month,] Nisan; about the tenth of March. This was an offering enjoined to cleanse the temple from defilement, previous to the celebration of the passover, which took place a few days after; see Lev. xvi. 19. W. Lowth. But the time, and the ceremony, and the circumstances of this offering are not to be found in the law of Moses, and appear to be entirely new. Calmet. Michaelis also observes, that the regulations which follow are in several circumstances very different from the Mosaical. Abp. Newcome.

19. —upon the posts] The door posts or lintels, chap. xli. 21.

20. —for every one that erreth, and for him that is simple:] For sins of ignorance, whether of private persons, or of the whole congregation; see Lev. iv. 2, 13, 27. W. Lowth.

23. —seven days] Moses in some places speaks of the feast of unleavened bread, which lasted seven days, as distinct from the day wherein the passover was to be eaten; see Lev. xxiii. 5, 6; which is agreeable to the injunctions of this and the following verse. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST 574.

24 And he shall prepare a meat offering of an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and an hin of oil for an ephah.

25 In the seventh month, in the fifteenth day of the month, shall he do the like in the [c] feast of the seven days, according to the sin offering, according to the burnt offering, and according to the meat offering, and according to the oil.

CHAP. XLVI.

1 Ordinances for the prince in his worship, 9 and for the people. 16 An order for the prince's inheritance. 19 The courts for boiling and baking.

THUS saith the Lord GOD; The gate of the inner court that looketh toward the east shall be shut the six working days; but on the sabbath it shall be opened, and in the day of the new moon it shall be opened.

2 And the prince shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate without, and shall stand by the post of the gate, and the priests shall prepare his burnt offering and his peace offerings, and he shall worship at the threshold of the gate: then he shall go forth; but the gate shall not be shut until the evening.

3 Likewise the people of the land shall worship at the door of this gate before the LORD in the sabbaths and in the new moons.

4 And the burnt offering that the prince shall offer unto the LORD in the sabbath day shall be six lambs without blemish, and a ram without blemish.

5 And the meat offering shall be an ephah for a ram, and the meat offering for the lambs † as he shall be able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

† Heb. the gift of his hand.

6 And in the day of the new moon it shall be a young bullock without blemish, and six lambs, and a ram: they shall be without blemish.

7 And he shall prepare a meat offering, an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and for the lambs according as his hand shall attain unto, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

Before CHRIST 574.

8 And when the prince shall enter, he shall go in by the way of the porch of that gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof.

9 ¶ But when the people of the land shall come before the LORD in the solemn feasts, he that entereth in by the way of the north gate to worship shall go out by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate shall go forth by the way of the north gate: he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go forth over against it.

10 And the prince in the midst of them, when they go in, shall go in; and when they go forth, shall go forth.

11 And in the feasts and in the solemnities the meat offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram, and to the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

12 Now when the prince shall prepare a voluntary burnt offering or peace offerings voluntarily unto the LORD, one shall then open him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare his burnt offering and his peace offerings, as he did on the sabbath day: then he shall go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate.

13 Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt offering unto the LORD of a lamb † of the first year without blemish: thou shalt prepare it † every morning.

† Heb. morning by morning.

14 And thou shalt prepare a meat offering for it every morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of

---

24. — an hin of oil for an ephah.] For each ephah of fine flour; an hin was the sixth part of an ephah or bath, and contained one gallon and two pints. Bp. Cumberland.

25. In the seventh month, &c.] At the feast of tabernacles he shall do the same things as have been directed here for the passover. Calmet.

Chap. XLVI. ver. 3. Likewise the people of the land &c.] During the continuance of the tabernacle, they that would offer any sacrifice were required to bring it to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and there lay their hands upon the head of it, Lev. i. 3, 4: and after the temple was built, they came to the north or south gate of the inner court, according as the sacrifice was to be slain on the north or south side of the altar, and there presented their sacrifice. Dr. Lightfoot. Here the inner porch of the east gate is assigned for their station who came to present themselves before the Lord upon the solemn festivals, and they were to come no further into the inner court. W. Lowth.

4. — the burnt offering — in the sabbath day] It was the prince's part to provide sacrifices for the sabbaths and other festivals; see chap. xlv. 17. This was a new ordinance, and accordingly the offerings are different from those prescribed in the law. Moses had directed only two lambs extraordinary to be offered on the sabbath day; see Numb. xxviii. 9. The other proportions of the meat and drink offerings are also different; compare ver. 4, 6, 7, and 14, with Numb. xxviii. 9, 11, 12, 5. Calmet, W. Lowth.

5. — as he shall be able to give,] As he is disposed to give; see Deut. xvi. 17. Abp. Newcome.

8. — of that gate,] Of the eastern gate. To enter by this gate was the privilege of the prince and priests only; see ver. 2. W. Lowth.

10. And the prince in the midst &c.] The prince shall observe the same times of My service with My people, both for his coming in and for his going forth. Bp. Hall.

12. — a voluntary burnt offering] See Lev. xxii. 18, 21. The gate which was shut the whole week shall be open to the prince when he makes a voluntary offering. Calmet.

oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat offering continually by a perpetual ordinance unto the LORD.

15 Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meat offering, and the oil, every morning for a continual burnt offering.

16 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD; If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons, the inheritance thereof shall be his sons'; it shall be their possession by inheritance.

17 But if he give a gift of his inheritance to one of his servants, then it shall be his to the year of liberty; after it shall return to the prince: but his inheritance shall be his sons' for them.

18 Moreover the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression, to thrust them out of their possession; but he shall give his sons inheritance out of his own possession: that my people be not scattered every man from his possession.

19 ¶ After he brought me through the entry, which was at the side of the gate, into the holy chambers of the priests, which looked toward the north: and, behold, there was a place on the two sides westward.

20 Then said he unto me, This is the place where the priests shall boil the trespass offering and the sin offering, where they shall bake the meat offering; that they bear them not out into the utter court, to sanctify the people.

21 Then he brought me forth into the utter court, and caused me to pass by the four corners of the court; and, behold, † in every corner of the court there was a court.

Before CHRIST 574.

22 In the four corners of the court there were courts ‖ joined of forty cubits long and thirty broad: these four † corners were of one measure.

23 And there was a row of building round about in them, round about them four, and it was made with boiling places under the rows round about.

24 Then said he unto me, These are the places of them that boil, where the ministers of the house shall boil the sacrifice of the people.

AFTERWARD he brought me again unto the door of the house; and, behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward: for the forefront of the house stood toward the east, and the waters came down from under from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar.

2 Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me about the way without unto the utter gate by the way that looketh eastward; and, behold, there ran out waters on the right side.

3 And when the man that had the line in his hand went forth eastward, he measured a thousand cubits, and he brought me part of an ephah of flour, and the fourth part of an hin of oil. W. Lowth. On account of this difference, this offering should be understood of the prince. Abp. Newcome.

17. —it shall be his to the year of liberty;] The year of jubilee; see note at Lev. xxv. 10. The power given to the prince in the former verse of alienating to his sons is entirely new. Calmet.

—— shall be his sons' for them.] It shall be theirs, so as not to be alienated. W. Lowth.

18. —the prince shall not take &c.] 1 Kings xxi. 16; compare chap. xlv. 8. W. Lowth.

19. —behold, there was a place on the two sides westward.] Or, on their sides westward; that is, there was an inclosure on the west sides of these chambers. W. Lowth.

23. —a row of building] On the inside of these courts. W. Lowth.

24. —the ministers of the house] Probably the Levites, or inferiour ministers. The former sacrifices were boiled by the priests in the court properly belonging to them; see chap. xl. 45, and note. W. Lowth.

Chap. XLVII. ver. 1. —the door of the house;] The door of the temple, which is described, chap. xli. 2. W. Lowth.

—— waters issued out from under the threshold — eastward:] There was a great quantity of water necessary for the uses of the temple, for washing the bodies of those that officiated, as well as the sacrifices which they offered; this was conveyed in pipes under ground from the fountain Etam. These waters gave occasion to the vision here related. Dr. Lightfoot, W. Lowth.

The progressive establishment of the Messiah's kingdom is declared by some of the later Prophets under the most striking and lively representations. In Nebuchadnezzar's dream, related by the Prophet Daniel, and by him expounded of successive kingdoms, that last kingdom set up by the God of heaven was at first no more than "a stone," but "it became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth," Dan. ii. 34, 35. In other prophecies, the gradual increase of this new dispensation is beautifully represented by the growth of a tender plant. See Ezek. xvii. 22, 23. And here again the several steps of this growth are pointed out to us by the same Prophet Ezekiel, under the image of a stream receiving continual accessions in its progress. The waters were at first extremely shallow, reaching only "to the ancles." At the next ford they came up "to the knees;" afterwards "to the loins;" and at last they were risen to a great height; "waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over:" see verses 3—5. The increasing blessings of the Messiah's kingdom are wont to be expressed under the figure of waters in prophetick language; see Isai. xxxv. 6, 7: and elsewhere the same figure is used with a peculiar resemblance to this place; see Joel iii. 18. Such a sense also best suits that healing and beneficial influence attributed to these sanctified waters, which are said to have power to "heal the waters of the sea," and to give life wherever they flow; "every thing shall live whither the river cometh." And of the trees nourished by this stream it is said, that "their leaf should not fade, nor their fruit be consumed; but their fruit should be for meat, and their leaf for medicine," verses 8—12. Bp. Bagot.

through the waters; the † waters were to the ancles.

4 Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through the waters; the waters were to the knees. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through; the waters were to the loins.

5 Afterward he measured a thousand; and it was a river that I could not pass over: for the waters were risen, † waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over.

† Heb. waters of swimming.

6 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen this? Then he brought me, and caused me to return to the brink of the river.

7 Now when I had returned, behold, at the † bank of the river were very many [a] trees on the one side and on the other.

‖ Or, plain.

9 And it shall come to pass, that every thing that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the † rivers shall come, shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither: for they shall be healed; and every thing shall live whither the river cometh.

† Heb. two rivers.

10 And it shall come to pass, that the fishers shall stand upon it from En-gedi even unto En-eglaim; they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many.

---

8. — the waters shall be healed.] This finely represents the tendency of the Gospel to heal the corruptions of human nature. Abp. Newcome.

10. — the fishers] The mention of fishers does indeed appear to determine this increase of religious knowledge and practice to Christianity. Our Saviour Christ told His disciples, that He would make them "fishers of men," Matt. iv. 19. Abp. Secker, W. Lowth.

—— from En-gedi] See the note on 1 Sam. xxiii. 29.

—— unto En-eglaim;] This city is placed by some at the north of the Dead sea, where the Jordan runs into it. Eglaim is mentioned, Isai. xv. 8, as a place on the borders of Moab, which country ran on the east of the Dead sea. Abp. Newcome.

—— as the fish of the great sea,] Of the great Mediterranean sea; see Josh. xxiii. 4, and chap. xlviii. 28. The fish on the coasts of Judea and Phenicia are very abundant. Harmer.

11. — the miry places] The Dead sea shall preserve its salt and bitter qualities on its shores and in its marshes, where the waters become stagnant. Calmet. The allegorical sense is, that some shall reject the Gospel, and some receive it without obeying it. Abp. Newcome. Saltness is equivalent to barrenness in the Hebrew language; see Ps. cvii. 34; Deut. xxix. 23; Judges ix. 45. W. Lowth.

12. — for meat,] For food.

—— whose leaf shall not fade,] They shall be like the trees of paradise, never barren or withering; a proper emblem of the flourishing state of the righteous still bringing forth fruit unto holiness, and whose end is everlasting life, Ps. i. 3; Jer. xvii. 8. W. Lowth.

—— new fruit according to his months, &c.] It shall be constantly fruitful; see Rev. xxii. 1, 2. From ver. 1. to ver. 12. we have one of the most striking allegories in the Hebrew Scriptures. Abp Newcome.

13. — This shall be the border,] This allotment, and that which follows in the next chapter, would probably have taken place, if the whole of the ten tribes, as well as those of Judah and Benjamin, had turned themselves to God; for by this means they also would have obtained permission to return: but since a few only belonging to the other tribes returned, and were confounded with those of Judah and Benjamin, they obtained settlements in common with them. Grotius. But there is without question a mystical sense implied under this literal description. W. Lowth.

—— Joseph shall have two portions.] See Gen. xlviii. 5; 1 Chron. v. 1.

14. — one as well as another:] Under Joshua the lots were proportioned to the numbers in each tribe. This mysterious equality shews perhaps, that in the Church of Christ there should be no distinction betwixt the Jew and the Gentile. Calmet.

15. — Hethlon,] Mentioned again chap. xlviii. 1. De L'Isle writes it Hethalon, and places it between Tyre and Damascus. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth. Zedad is written Sedada in De L'Isle, and placed east of Hethlon, nearly in the same latitude. "The northern border of the land was to begin from the west point, on which side lay the Mediterranean sea, and so on northward towards Hethlon, and so on forward to Zedad;" mentioned Numb. xxxiv. 8. *W. 20 The west side also shall be the great sea from the border, till a man come over against Hamath. This is the west side.

21 So shall ye divide this land unto you according to the tribes of Israel.

22 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that ye shall divide it by lot for an inheritance unto you, and to the strangers that sojourn among you, which shall beget children among you: and they shall be unto you as born in the country among the children of Israel; they shall have inheritance with you among the tribes of Israel.

23 And it shall come to pass, that in what tribe the stranger sojourneth, there shall ye give him his inheritance, saith the Lord GOD.

NOW these are the names of the tribes. From the north end to the coast of the way of Hethlon, as one goeth to Hamath, Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus northward, to the coast of Hamath; for these are his sides east and west; a portion for Dan. Before CHRIST 574.

2 And by the border of Dan, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Asher.

3 And by the border of Asher, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Naphtali.

4 And by the border of Naphtali, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Manasseh.

5 And by the border of Manasseh, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Ephraim.

6 And by the border of Ephraim, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Reuben.

7 And by the border of Reuben, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Judah.

19. And the south side southward, from Tamar] The southern frontier shall be from "En-gedi," called "Hazazon-tamar," 2 Chron. xx. 2, to the waters of Meribah, or strife, in Kadesh, Deut. xxxii. 51; and from thence to the river of Egypt. Dr. Lightfoot, W. Lowth.

22. — and to the strangers &c.] Foreigners before never had the privilege of purchasing or possessing any inheritance among the Jews; so this mystically imports the incorporating of the Gentiles into the same Church with the Jews, making them "fellowheirs, and of the same body" with them "by the Gospel," Ephes. iii. 6. W. Lowth. There is no reason to believe that this privilege was ever granted under Zerubbabel. Calmet. From ver. 15. to the end of the chapter is prefigured such an extension and enlargement of the Christian Church, as that it shall reach all the world over, even from one end of the world to the other. Bp. Hall.

Chap. XLVIII. ver. 1. — From the north end &c.] Having given a general description of the boundaries of the Holy Land, the Prophet now proceeds to state the limits of each tribe, beginning as before from the north. Calmet.

Newcome.* It had Judah to the north, and Benjamin to the south; see the plan. St. Jerome reckons sixty miles from Joppa to Jordan; so that supposing the holy portion about seven miles square, there will remain about twenty-six on each side, east and west, for the prince's share. *W. 32 And at the east side four thousand and five hundred: and three gates; and one gate of Joseph, one gate of Benjamin, one gate of Dan.

33 And at the south side four thousand and five hundred measures: and three gates; one gate of Simeon, one gate of Issachar, one gate of Zebulun.

34 At the west side four thousand and five hundred, with their three gates; one gate of Gad, one gate of Asher, one gate of Naphtali.

35 It was round about eighteen thousand measures: and the name of the city from that day shall be, † The LORD is there.

† Heb. Jehovah-shammah.

The sense of the verse is, that the possession belonging to the priests and Levites, (see ver. 11,) and the city, were bounded on the east and west by the prince's portion; that the former lay in the middle, the latter beyond them. W. Lowth.

25. — Issachar] These appointments are not laid out with any regard to the division of the land made in Joshua's time; for here a platform of a new church and state is set forth. W. Lowth.

28. — from Tamar] See note on chap. xlvii. 19.

29. — for inheritance,] Since there is no doubt but that other things which are said in these chapters relating to the temple, and the land of Israel, are of a prophetical nature, it seems safer to determine that the abovementioned measures were observed both in building the temple and in assigning the lots to the tribes; though we know not how these things were done, because there is a great chasm in the sacred history, from the time of Ezra to that of the Maccabees. Houbigant.

It is the opinion of some learned men, that so particular a description of the several portions allotted to each tribe, relates to the Jewish settlement in their own country after their conversion; several passages in the Prophets looking that way. But without laying too great a stress upon that opinion, we may fairly suppose some mystical sense contained under this description; the twelve tribes denote the true Christian Church in the New Testament; see Luke xxii. 30. So this division of the land among the twelve tribes may imply, that all true Christians shall be equally sharers in the privileges of the Gospel. W. Lowth.

30. — on the north side,] See ver. 16, where the same measures are set forth. There were three gates in the face of each wall, and the whole circuit of the city was eighteen thousand cubits. Calmet.

32. — one gate of Joseph,] There being a gate named after Levi, the gate of Joseph includes Ephraim and Manasseh, the sons of Joseph. Abp. Newcome.

35. — The Lord is there.] It is frequently said in the sacred writings, that a person or a thing shall be called by a certain name, where it is predicted that the person or thing shall be endowed with those qualities which the name imports. When Isaiah predicts the coming of the Messiah, he says, that "His name shall be called Wonderful, Counseller, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace;" because He was to possess the qualities which would serve as a foundation to these titles. In this sense Jerusalem is called in the Psalms, the "city of God, the city of the Great King;" and in Isaiah, "The city of Righteousness, the faithful city;" and in this passage, "The Lord is there." Calmet.

In this new Jerusalem, the Church of Christ; God shall dwell in a more glorious manner, and make it the place of His perpetual residence; so that every part of that city shall be honoured with evident tokens of the Divine presence; and every member of it being dedicated to God's service, and becoming an habitation of God through His Spirit, shall have some degree of the holiness of the temple where God had placed His name, 1 Kings viii. 29, compared with Rev. xxi. 22. This is in a lower degree fulfilled in all good Christians, who are called, "the temple of the living God," 2 Cor. vi. 16; 1 Pet. ii. 5: and "an habitation of God through the Spirit," Eph. ii. 22. W. Lowth.

THE BOOK OF

DANIEL.

INTRODUCTION.

DANIEL was of the tribe of Judah, and of very illustrious, if not of royal, descent. Josephus says, he was of the family of Zedekiah, the last king of Judah before the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuzar-adan. He was carried away captive to Babylon in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, in the year of the world 3398, probably in the eighteenth or twentieth year of his age: and on account of his birth, wisdom, and accomplishments, was selected to stand in the presence of Nebuchadnezzar.

Daniel's strength and habits of mind were of a very superiour cast, whether considered as the gifts of nature, or the acquisitions of well-applied industry. "An excellent spirit was in him," which directed him to cultivate and improve all the proper means of knowledge: so that he became master of all the literature of the Chaldeans, and was far superiour to all the Magi, or wise men of the East. He was not only renowned for secular wisdom, but favoured with Divine illuminations; had extraordinary insight into visions, and discernment in the interpretation of dreams. Qualified with these abilities, he was admitted to the special favour of several very powerful monarchs; of Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Darius, and Cyrus: and hence he is supposed to have resided, not only in the court at Babylon, but occasionally also in those of Media and Persia. Wintle.

In the vicissitudes of his life, as in the virtues which he displayed, he has been thought to have resembled Joseph. Like him, he lived amidst the corruption of a great court; and preserved an unshaken attachment to his religion, in a situation embarrassed with difficulties, and surrounded by temptations. He publickly professed God's service, in defiance of every danger; and predicted His fearful judgments to the very face of intemperate and powerful tyrants. It may be collected from the pensive cast of his writings, that he was of that melancholy disposition, which might be expected to characterize the servants of the true God amidst scenes of idolatry. He experienced throughout his life very signal and miraculous proofs of Divine favour; and was looked up to by the Persians, as well as by his own countrymen, as an oracle of inspired wisdom. He appears to have attained a great age, as he prophesied during the whole period of the captivity. He probably however did not long survive his last vision concerning the succession of the kings of Persia, which he beheld in the third year of Cyrus, and in the year of the world 3470, when the Prophet must have reached his ninetieth year.

The book of Daniel contains a very interesting mixture of history and prophecies. The six first chapters are chiefly historical, and are written with much spirit and animation: we seem to be present at the scenes described, and the whole is enriched with the most exalted sentiments of piety, and with the finest attestations to the praise and glory of God. The six last chapters are composed of prophecies, delivered at different times, all of which are however connected as parts of one great scheme. They extend through many ages, and furnish the most striking description of the fall of successive kingdoms, which were to be introductory to the establishment of the Messiah's reign. They characterize in descriptive terms the four great monarchies of the world to be succeeded by "that kingdom which shall not be destroyed." They foreshew the power and destruction of Antichrist in predictions repeated and extended by St. John; and conclude with a distinct assurance of a general resurrection to a life of everlasting shame, or everlasting glory. Dr. Gray.

In general the words of Daniel are proper, well chosen, and comprehensive; his diction simple and chaste, yet often strong and nervous; and his whole style compact, concise, and close, but pure and regular. Sometimes however he is diffusive and copious, enlarges an idea, and swells an image to an uncommon pitch of grandeur. His book is not to be reckoned among the poetical compositions of the sacred volume: he makes great use indeed of parabolical imagery, but as a Prophet, shadowing out things and events by means of visions and allegories, without any colouring of a poetick style. Wintle, Bp. Lowth.

With respect to the genuineness and authenticity of this Book of Daniel, there is abundance both of external and of internal evidence. Of external evidence, there is all that can well be had or desired in a case of this nature: not only the testimony of the whole Jewish Church and nation, who have constantly received this book as canonical; but of Josephus particularly, who recommends him as the greatest of the Prophets; of the Jewish Targums and Talmuds, which frequently cite and appeal to his authority; of St. Paul and St. John, who have copied many of his prophecies; of our Saviour Himself, who citeth his words, and styleth him "Daniel the Prophet;" of ancient historians, who relate many of the same transactions; of the mother of the seven sons and of the father of the Maccabees, who both recommend the example of Daniel to their sons; of old Eleazar in Egypt, who, praying for the Jews then suffering under the persecution of Ptolemy Philopator, 3 Mac. vi. 5, 6, mentions the deliverance of Daniel out of the den of lions, together with the deliverance of the three men out of the fiery furnace; of the Jewish High Priest, who shewed Daniel's prophecies to Alexander the Great, whilst he was at Jerusalem; and still higher, of Ezekiel, a contemporary writer, who greatly extols his piety and wisdom. Nor is the internal less powerful and convincing than the external evidence: for the language, the style, the manner of writing, and all other internal marks and characters, are perfectly agreeable to that age: and he appears plainly and undeniably to have been a Prophet by the exact accomplishment of his prophecies, as well those which have already been fulfilled, as those which are now fulfilling in the world. Bp. Newton.

To reject the prophecies of Daniel is to reject the Christian religion; for this religion is founded upon his prophecy concerning the Messiah: (Sir Isaac Newton:) but to read this book with attention, and intelligence, and with an unbiassed mind to follow the advice of our Saviour, when He quoted this very prophecy, "Let him that readeth understand," might be sufficient to convert an unbeliever from Deism to Christianity. Bp. Watson.

CHAP. I.

Before CHRIST about 607.

1 Jehoiakim's captivity. 3 Ashpenaz taketh Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah. 8 They refusing the king's portion do prosper with pulse and water. 17 Their excellency in wisdom.

about 607. IN the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah [a] came Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon unto Jerusalem, and besieged it.

[a] 2 Kings 24. 1. 2 Chron. 36. 6.

about 606. 2 And the LORD gave Jehoiakim king of Judah into his hand, with part of the vessels of the house of God: which he carried into the land of Shinar to the house of his god; and he brought the vessels into the treasure house of his god.

3 ¶ And the king spake unto Ashpenaz the master of his eunuchs, that he should bring certain of the children of Israel, and of the king's seed, and of the princes;

4 Children in whom was no blemish, but well favoured, and skilful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability in them to stand in the king's palace, and whom they might teach the learning and the tongue of the Chaldeans.

5 And the king appointed them a daily provision of the king's meat, and of † the wine which he drank: so nourishing them three years, that at the end thereof they might stand before the king.

† Heb. the wine of his drink.

Before CHRIST 606.

6 Now among these were of the children of Judah, Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah:

7 Unto whom the prince of the eunuchs gave names: for he gave unto Daniel the name of Belteshazzar; and to Hananiah, of Shadrach; and to Mishael, of Meshach; and to Azariah, of Abed-nego.

8 ¶ But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank: therefore he requested of the prince of the eunuchs that he might not defile himself.

9 Now God had brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince of the eunuchs.

10 And the prince of the eunuchs said unto Daniel, I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink: for why should he see your faces † worse liking than the children which are of your ‖ sort? then shall ye make me endanger my head to the king.

‖ Or, term, or, continuance.

11 Then said Daniel to ‖ Melzar, whom the prince of the eunuchs had set over Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah,

‖ Or, the steward.

Chap. I. ver. 1. In the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim — came Nebuchadnezzar &c.] Jeremiah makes the first year of Nebuchadnezzar coincide with the fourth year of Jehoiakim, and thence begins the date of the seventy years' captivity: see Jer. xxv. 1. But here Daniel speaks of Nebuchadnezzar as king of Babylon in the third year of Jehoiakim. In explanation it may be observed, that Daniel begins his computation from the time that Nebuchadnezzar was sent by his father against Pharaoh-necho king of Egypt, which was towards the latter end of the third year of Jehoiakim. In the beginning of the following year he conquered the Egyptians, which was the fourth year of Jehoiakim: see Jer. xlvi. 2. And in the latter end of the same year he came and besieged Jerusalem; at which time Jehoiakim became tributary to the king of Babylon, and consequently the seventy years of captivity and vassalage to Babylon began. Dean Prideaux.

2. — into the land of Shinar] This was the original name of the country about Babylon, Gen. xi. 2; and it was still in use with the Prophets. See Isai. xi. 11; Zech. v. 11. W. Lowth.

—— the treasure house of his God.] Of the idol Bel. See Jer. l. 2. W. Lowth. The treasury was a place in ancient temples, appropriated for the reception of spoils and trophies, that were consecrated to the deity, to which the temple belonged. Wintle.

3. — the master of his eunuchs,] Or, "the chief of his chamberlains." It appears to have been a title given to the satraps, or such distinguished men as had the care of the royal chambers or wardrobe. Wintle.

—— and of the king's seed,] Rather, "even of the king's seed." Isaiah's prophecy, chap. xxxix. 7, was thus punctually fulfilled. W. Lowth.

4. Children in whom was no blemish,] He was directed to make choice of such as had the best accomplishments both of body and mind, and were fit to give attendance in a king's court. The word interpreted "children" is used in Scripture of such as are past the age of childhood, as we now distinguish the parts of man's life. See 1 Kings xii. 8. W. Lowth.

—— whom they might teach the learning and the tongue of the Chaldeans.] Besides the study of politicks and the art of war, the learning chiefly valued among them was astrology, or the knowledge of the heavenly motions, the interpretation of dreams, and architecture. W. Lowth.

As Moses was "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians," so we are not to wonder that Daniel was taught the learning of the Chaldeans; and that he so far excelled in it, as to be placed at the head of the Magi. See chap. iv. 9. Wintle.

5. — of the king's meat,] So that, according to the Eastern manners, they should be fed with such food and wine as were served at the king's table. Wintle.

7. — gave names:] It was customary among the Eastern nations, for the kings to distinguish their favourites by new names, when they conferred on them new dignities: and the Mogul still adheres to the custom. Dr. Gray. There might also be in this case a desire to wean these young Jews from the manners of their country, and to bring them to a conformity with the Chaldee usages in all respects. Wintle.

—— Belteshazzar;] "According to the name of his god," as Nebuchadnezzar himself derives the word, chap. iv. 8. So the name was derived from Bel, the chief idol of Babylon, as Nebuchadnezzar had his own name from Nebo, another of their idols, mentioned Isai. xlvi. 1; and Evil-merodach, his successor, was named from their idol, Merodach, Jer. l. 2. W. Lowth.

8. But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself &c.] The defilement here alluded to might arise, either from the food being prohibited in the law of Moses, or else from its being what was offered to the idols of the Chaldees, or at least intreated to be blessed in their name: see 1 Cor. viii. 10, and Ezek. iv. 13. Wintle.

9. Now God had brought Daniel into favour &c.] See Gen. xxxix. 21; and compare Ps. cvi. 46. W. Lowth.

10. — of your sort?] Or, "of your age." W. Lowth. Probably it may include the condition also. Wintle.

Before CHRIST about 606.

12 Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days; and let them give us † pulse † to eat, and water to drink.

† Heb. of pulse.

13 Then let our countenances be looked upon before thee, and the countenance of the children that eat of the portion of the king's meat: and as thou seest, deal with thy servants.

† Heb. that we may eat, &c.

14 So he consented to them in this matter, and proved them ten days.

15 And at the end of ten days their countenances appeared fairer and fatter in flesh than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat.

16 Thus Melzar took away the portion of their meat, and the wine that they should drink; and gave them pulse.

17 ¶ As for these four children, God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom: and ‖ Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams.

‖ Or, he made Daniel understand.

603.

18 Now at the end of the days that the king had said he should bring them in, then the prince of the eunuchs brought them in before Nebuchadnezzar.

19 And the king communed with them; and among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah: therefore stood they before the king.

† Heb. wisdom of understanding.

20 And in all matters of † wisdom and understanding, that the king enquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm.

Before CHRIST 603.

CHAP. II.

1 Nebuchadnezzar, forgetting his dream, requireth it of the Chaldeans, by promises and threatenings. 10 They acknowledging their inability are judged to die. 14 Daniel obtaining some respite findeth the dream. 19 He blesseth God. 24 He staying the decree is brought to the king. 31 The dream. 36 The interpretation. 46 Daniel's advancement.

AND in the second year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar Nebuchadnezzar dreamed dreams, wherewith his spirit was troubled, and his sleep brake from him.

2 Then the king commanded to call the magicians, and the astrologers, and the sorcerers, and the Chaldeans, for to shew the king his dreams. So they came and stood before the king.

3 And the king said unto them, I have dreamed a dream, and my spirit was troubled to know the dream.

4 Then spake the Chaldeans to the king in Syriack, [a] O king, live for ever: tell thy servants the dream, and we will shew the interpretation.

[a] Chap. 3. 9.

12. — pulse] Various sorts of grain were dried and prepared for food by the people of the East, as wheat, barley, rice, and pulse. Of some of these was the parched corn mentioned in Scripture, and the chief food of the labourers and poorer sort of people. Wintle.

15. — their countenances appeared fairer and fatter in flesh &c.] Abstinence from wine and from rich food is no injury, but rather an improvement, to the health and complexion of people in those countries. What is said therefore of the effects of the abstemiousness of Daniel and his companions, might be nothing miraculous or out of the common course of things. Sir J. Chardin, Harmer.

17. — in all visions and dreams.] Not fortuitous or casual dreams, but such as were sent from Heaven. Wintle. See the note on Gen. xx. 3.

19. — among them all] That is, among all the young men alluded to at ver. 4. Wintle.

—— therefore stood they before the king.] They were in continual attendance in the king's court. So Joseph "stood before Pharaoh," Gen. xli. 46. Compare 1 Kings xvii. 1; Jer. xv. 19; Numb. xvi. 9. W. Lowth.

20. — the magicians and astrologers] These words seem to comprehend the persons in general, who were distinguished in the several kinds of learning cultivated among the Chaldees. Of the like character were the Magi in Egypt and Persia, and the other countries of the East, and those "wise men," that came to our Saviour at His birth, Matt. ii. 1. Wintle.

21. And Daniel continued even unto the first year of king Cyrus.] And so witnessed the accomplishment of Jeremiah's prophecy concerning the seventy years, Ezra i. 1. This being so remarkable a year, the text takes notice that Daniel lived so long: not but that he lived longer, at least till the third year of Cyrus, as appears from chap. x. 1. W. Lowth.

Chap. II. The prophecies of Daniel are all of them related to one another, as if they were but several parts of one general prophecy, given at several times. The first is the easiest to be understood, and every following prophecy adds something new to the former. Sir Isaac Newton.

Ver. 1. — in the second year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar] The second year, according to the Babylonian account, or the fourth, according to the Jewish; that is, in the second year of his reigning alone, or the fourth of his reigning jointly with his father. Bp. Newton. Daniel, writing the following history in Chaldee for the use of the Chaldeans, follows the computation of time in use among them. W. Lowth.

—— dreams,] Though it was but one continued dream, it contained a succession of various events. W. Lowth, Wintle.

2. — the sorcerers] See the note on chap. i. 20. By "sorcerers" seems to be meant a sort of necromancers, who pretended to an acquaintance with departed spirits. Wintle.

—— the Chaldeans,] The Chaldeans were so much addicted to the study of the heavenly motions, and to make prognostications from them, that the word "Chaldean" is used both in Greek and Latin authors for an astrologer. W. Lowth. According to this sense, we find it used below, ver. 4, for the magicians of every sort. Wintle.

4. — in Syriack,] That is, in the Aramean or Syrian language, as understood in its largest sense, being what was spoken by the Assyrians, Babylonians, and many of the neighbouring nations, and the same with what was called the ancient Chaldee. This language, when corrupted by the introduction of many Hebrew words, is called the Hebrew tongue in the New Testament. The language, spoken in Antioch and other parts of Syria, differs as a dialect from the two former, and is what we now call the Syriack. Wintle, W. Lowth.

—— O king, live for ever:] Or, "Long live the king." An usual mode of addressing the monarch. When he in his turn addressed the people, it was in the form, "Peace be multiplied unto you:" see chap. iv. 1. Wintle.

Before CHRIST 603.

5 The king answered and said to the Chaldeans, The thing is gone from me: if ye will not make known unto me the dream, with the interpretation thereof, ye shall be [b] † cut in pieces, and your houses shall be made a dunghil.

[b] Chap. 3. 29.

† Chald. made pieces.

6 But if ye shew the dream, and the interpretation thereof, ye shall receive of me gifts and ‖ rewards and great honour: therefore shew me the dream, and the interpretation thereof.

‖ Or, fee, ch. 5. 17.

7 They answered again and said, Let the king tell his servants the dream, and we will shew the interpretation of it.

8 The king answered and said, I know of certainty that ye would † gain the time, because ye see the thing is gone from me.

9 But if ye will not make known unto me the dream, there is but one decree for you: for ye have prepared lying and corrupt words to speak before me, till the time be changed: therefore tell me the dream, and I shall know that ye can shew me the interpretation thereof.

10 ¶ The Chaldeans answered before the king, and said, There is not a man upon the earth that can shew the king's matter: therefore there is no king, lord, nor ruler, that asked such things at any magician, or astrologer, or Chaldean.

11 And it is a rare thing that the king requireth, and there is none other that can shew it before the king, except the gods, whose dwelling is not with flesh.

12 For this cause the king was angry and very furious, and commanded to destroy all the wise men of Babylon.

13 And the decree went forth that the wise men should be slain; and they sought Daniel and his fellows to be slain.

Before CHRIST 603.

14 ¶ Then Daniel † answered with counsel and wisdom to Arioch the ‖ † captain of the king's guard, which was gone forth to slay the wise men of Babylon:

† Chald. returned.

15 He answered and said to Arioch the king's captain, Why is the decree so hasty from the king? Then Arioch made the thing known to Daniel.

† Chald. chief of the executioners, or, slaughtermen.

16 Then Daniel went in, and desired of the king that he would give him time, and that he would shew the king the interpretation.

17 Then Daniel went to his house, and made the thing known to Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, his companions:

18 That they would desire mercies † of the God of heaven concerning this secret; ‖ that Daniel and his fellows should not perish with the rest of the wise men of Babylon.

† Chald. from before God.

‖ Or, that they should not destroy Daniel, &c.

19 ¶ Then was the secret revealed unto Daniel in a night vision. Then Daniel blessed the God of heaven.

20 Daniel answered and said, [c] Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever: for wisdom and might are his:

[c] Ps. 113. 2. & 115. 18.

21 And he changeth the times and the seasons: he removeth kings, and setteth up kings: he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding:

22 He revealeth the deep and secret things: he knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with him.

23 I thank thee, and praise thee, O thou God of my fathers, who hast given me wisdom and might, and hast made known unto me now what we desired of thee: for thou hast now made known unto us the king's matter.

5. — The thing is gone from me:] Meaning, "I do not recollect it," according to the Greek and Latin versions: or, according to the Syriack, "The word is most sure which I say;" that is, My decree is gone forth and is irrevocable. Wintle.

——ye shall be cut in pieces,] That is, alive: a dreadful punishment sometimes inflicted by the Babylonians. Parkhurst. Compare 1 Sam. xv. 33; Heb. xi. 37; Luke xii. 46. The same sort of punishment is still used in Abyssinia. Bruce.

8. — I know of certainty that ye would gain the time,] Ye seek delays, in order to gain time; that the king's attention to other concerns might make him forget this. Wintle.

9. — till the time be changed:] Until some other occasion may divert me from this earnest inquiry. Bp. Hall.

10. — There is not a man upon the earth &c.] The answer of the Chaldeans was very reasonable, that no king had ever required such a thing, that it transcended all the powers and faculties of man; God alone could disclose it. But the pride of absolute power cannot hear any reason, or bear any control. Bp. Newton. The furious and arbitrary conduct of Nebuchadnezzar both in this instance, and in that which is recorded in the following chapter, is much illustrated by history, which shews that such characters are not uncommon among the Eastern monarchs.

18. That they would desire mercies &c.] Many useful observations might be drawn from this passage on the nature, the efficacy, and the rewards, of devotion; on the power and prevalency of united addresses to Heaven; and the important benefits, which the piety of a few holy men may sometimes bring down upon a multitude. Such improvements must be obvious to every attentive reader. Wintle.

20. — Blessed be the name of God &c.] In this and the three next verses, the Prophet has celebrated the praises of the Almighty in a simple, but truly sublime and animated, strain of warm and unaffected piety; has made especial mention of His wisdom and power; and illustrated the display of those attributes in several instances apposite to the subject and occasion. Wintle.

21. — he changeth the times and the seasons: &c.] The great changes of the world are brought to pass by removing kings and transferring their dominions to others: by raising some empires and pulling down others. W. Lowth.

22. — the light dwelleth with him.] With Him, and in Him, is all perfection of knowledge, and power of illumination. Bp. Hall.

Before CHRIST 603.

24 ¶ Therefore Daniel went in unto Arioch, whom the king had ordained to destroy the wise men of Babylon: he went and said thus unto him; Destroy not the wise men of Babylon: bring me in before the king, and I will shew unto the king the interpretation.

25 Then Arioch brought in Daniel before the king in haste, and said thus unto him, † I have found a man of the † captives of Judah, that will make known unto the king the interpretation.

† Chald. That I have found.

26 The king answered and said to Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, Art thou able to make known unto me the dream which I have seen, and the interpretation thereof?

27 Daniel answered in the presence of the king, and said, The secret which the king hath demanded cannot the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the soothsayers, shew unto the king;

28 But there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and † maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days. Thy dream, and the visions of thy head upon thy bed, are these;

Before CHRIST 603.

† Chald. hath made known.

29 As for thee, O king, thy thoughts † came into thy mind upon thy bed, what should come to pass hereafter: and he that revealeth secrets maketh known to thee what shall come to pass.

† Chald. came up.

30 But as for me, this secret is not revealed to me for any wisdom that I have more than any living, but for their sakes that shall make known the interpretation to the king, and that thou mightest know the thoughts of thy heart.

31 ¶ Thou, O king, † sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible.

32 This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his ‖ thighs of brass,

28. But there is a God in heaven &c.] Daniel's great modesty in disclaiming all merit or extraordinary wisdom on his own part; his piety in giving the glory to God alone, and at the same time his skill and dexterity in preparing the king's attention, and gradually opening his understanding to the reception of the truth, and the acknowledgment of the one true God, are very remarkable. Wintle. The impious king, as St. Jerome justly observes, had a prophetick dream, that, the saint interpreting it, God might be glorified, and the captives, and those who served God in captivity, might receive great consolation. We read the same thing of Pharaoh. Bp. Newton.

—— the latter days.] This phrase often signifies the times of the Messiah, called the last times or age of the world. See the note on Isai. ii. 2; and so the expression may be understood here: for the prophecy contained in this vision reaches to the establishment of Messiah's kingdom. See ver. 44, and compare chap. x. 14. W. Lowth.

30. —but for their sakes that shall make known the interpretation to the king,] That this may be the means for myself and my three friends to gain your goodwill, the better to promote the glory of God, and do kindnesses to our brethren of the captivity. W. Lowth.

31. Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image.] In this vision of the image composed of four metals, the foundation of all Daniel's prophecies is laid. It represents a body of four great nations, which should reign over the earth successively; namely, the people of Babylonia, the Persians, the Greeks, and the Romans. And by a stone cut out without hands, which fell upon the feet of the image, and brake all the four metals to pieces, and "became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth," it further represents, that a new kingdom should arise after the four, and conquer all those nations, and grow very great, and last to the end of all ages. Sir Isaac Newton.

—— This great image, whose brightness was excellent, &c.] A great terrible human figure is not an improper emblem of human power and dominion; and the various metals, of which it was composed, not unfitly typify the various kingdoms that should arise. The order of their succession is clearly denoted by the order of the parts, the head and higher parts signifying the earlier times, and the lower parts the latter times. Bps. Chandler and Newton.

Grotius acutely observes, that this image appeared with a glorious lustre in the imagination of Nebuchadnezzar, whose mind was wholly taken up with admiration of worldly pomp and splendour: whereas the same monarchies were represented to Daniel under the shape of fierce and wild beasts, chap. vii; as being the great supporters of idolatry and tyranny in the world. W. Lowth.

32. This image's head was of fine gold,] Which Daniel interprets, ver. 38, "Thou art this head of gold;" thou, and thy family, and thy representatives. The Babylonian therefore was the first of these kingdoms; and it was fitly represented by the "head of fine gold," on account of its great riches: and Babylon for the same reason was called by Isaiah "the golden city," chap. xiv. 4. Daniel addresses Nebuchadnezzar, as if he were a very powerful king, and his empire very large and extensive: "Thou, O king, art a king of kings:" &c. see verses 37 and 38. Almost all the ancient Eastern histories are lost: but there are some fragments even of heathen historians yet preserved, which speak of this mighty conqueror and his extended empire, and describe him as holding in subjection Egypt, Syria, Phenicia, and Arabia, as having subdued the greatest part of Libya and Spain, and as having proceeded as far as to the pillars of Hercules, and led his army out of Spain into Thrace and Pontus. But his empire, though of great extent, was yet of no long duration: for it ended in his grandson Belshazzar, not seventy years after the delivery of this prophecy, and not above twenty-three years after the death of Nebuchadnezzar. Bp. Newton.

—— his breast and his arms of silver,] Which Daniel interprets, ver. 39, "And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee." The kingdom, which arose after the Babylonian, was the Medo-Persian. The two hands and the shoulders, saith Josephus, signify that the empire of the Babylonians should be dissolved by two kings. The two kings were the kings of the Medes and Persians, whose powers were united under Cyrus, who was son of one of the kings, and son in law of the other, who besieged and took Babylon, put an end to that empire, and on its ruins erected the Medo-Persian, or Persian, as it is more usually called, the Persians having soon gained the ascendancy over the Medes. This empire is said to have been inferiour, as being less than the former, according to the sense of the Latin Vulgate, because neither Cyrus, nor either of his successors, ever carried their arms into Africa or Spain, so far as Nebuchadnezzar is reported to have done: or rather inferiour, as being worse than the former: for Dean Prideaux asserts, and it may be very truly so asserted, that the kings of Persia were the worst race of men

Before CHRIST 603.

33 His legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay.

34 Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out ‖ without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces.

‖ Or, which was not in hands: as ver. 45.

35 Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshingfloors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote that ever governed an empire. This empire, from its first establishment by Cyrus, to the death of the last king Darius Codomannus, lasted not much more than two hundred years. Bp. Newton.

The arms and shields of the Persians were frequently ornamented or cased with silver: whence Alexander instituted that remarkable body of veteran infantry, called Argyraspides, from their silver shields, after the conquest of Persia, adopting the manners of the conquered nations. Dr. Hales.

——his belly and his thighs of brass,] Which Daniel interprets, ver. 39, "And another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth." Alexander the Great subverted the Persian empire. The kingdom therefore, which succeeded to the Persian, was the Macedonian: and this kingdom was fitly represented by brass; for the Greeks were famous for their brasen armour, their usual epithet being, "the brasen-coated Greeks." The interpretation of Daniel in Josephus is, that another, coming from the west, completely armed in brass, shall destroy the empire of the Medes and Persians. This third kingdom is also said to "bear rule over all the earth," by a figure usual in almost all authors. Alexander himself commanded, that he should be called the king of all the world: not that he really conquered, or near conquered, the whole world, but he had considerable dominions in Europe, Asia, and Africa; that is, in all the three parts of the world then known: and Diodorus Siculus, and other historians, give an account of ambassadours coming from almost all the world to congratulate him on his success, or to submit to his empire; and then especially, as Arrian remarks, did Alexander appear to himself, and to those about him, to be master both of the earth and of the sea.

The Seleucidæ, who reigned in Syria, and the Lagidæ, who reigned in Egypt, successors of Alexander, might be designed particularly by "the two thighs" of brass. And of all his successors they alone might be pointed out, because they alone had much connexion with the Jewish church and nation. Bp. Newton.

33. His legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay.] Which is thus interpreted by Daniel, "And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron:" &c. See verses 40—43. The Romans succeeded next to the Macedonians, and therefore in course were next to be mentioned. The Roman empire was stronger and larger than any of the preceding. The Romans brake in pieces and subdued all the former kingdoms. The iron was "mixed with miry clay," and the Romans were defiled with a mixture of barbarous nations. The Roman empire was at length divided into ten lesser kingdoms, answering to the ten toes of the image, as we shall see hereafter. These kingdoms retained much of the old Roman strength, and manifested it upon several occasions, so that "the kingdom was partly strong, and partly broken." They "mingled themselves with the seed of men;" they made marriages and alliances one with another, as they continue to do at this day: but no union ensued; reasons of state are stronger than the ties of blood, and interest generally avails more than affinity. Some expound it of the secular and ecclesiastical powers, sometimes agreeing, and sometimes clashing and interfering with each other, to the weakening of both, and endangering of their breaking to pieces. The Roman empire therefore is represented in a double state; first, with the strength of iron, conquering all before it, "his legs of iron;" and then weakened and divided by the mixture of barbarous nations, "his feet part of iron and part of clay." It subdued Syria, and made the kingdom of the Seleucidæ a Roman province in the year 65 before Christ; it subdued Egypt, and made the kingdom of the Lagidæ a Roman province in the year 30 before Christ: and in the fourth century after Christ, it began to be torn in pieces by the incursions of the barbarous nations. Bp. Newton.

34, 35. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands,] Which is interpreted and explained by Daniel, in the 44th and 45th verses, "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom," &c. This description can with propriety be understood only, as the ancients understood it, of the kingdom of Christ. "And in the days of these kings;" that is, in the days of some of them. As "in the days when the judges ruled," Ruth i. 1, signifies "in the days when some" of the judges ruled: so "in the days of these kings" signifies, "in the days" of some "of these kingdoms:" and it must be during the days of some of the last of them, because they are reckoned "four" in succession, and consequently this must be the fifth kingdom. Accordingly the kingdom of Christ was set up during the last of these kingdoms; that is, the Romans. "The stone" was a totally different thing from "the image," and the kingdom of Christ is totally different from the kingdoms of this world. "The stone was cut out of the mountain without hands," as our heavenly body is said (2 Cor. v. 1.) to be "a building of God, an house not made with hands;" that is, spiritual, as the phrase is used in other places, Mark xiv. 58, compared with John ii. 21: see also Col. ii. 9. This is to be understood of the kingdom of Christ, which was formed out of the Roman empire, not by number of hands, or strength of armies, but without human means, and the virtue of second causes. This kingdom was "set up by the God of heaven;" and from hence the phrase of the "kingdom of heaven" came to signify the kingdom of the Messiah; and so it was used and understood by the Jews, and so it is applied by our Saviour in the New Testament. Other kingdoms were raised by human ambition and worldly power: but this was the work, not of man, but of God; this was truly, as it is called, the "kingdom of heaven," and, John xviii. 36, "a kingdom not of this world;" its laws, its powers, were all Divine. This kingdom was never to be destroyed, as the Babylonian, the Persian, and the Macedonian empires have been, and in great measure also the Roman. This kingdom was to "break in pieces" and consume all the other kingdoms, to spread and enlarge itself, so that it should comprehend within itself all the former kingdoms. This kingdom was to "fill the whole earth," to become universal, and to stand for ever.

As the fourth kingdom, or the Roman empire, was represented in a twofold state, first strong and flourishing with "legs of iron," and then weakened and divided with feet and toes, "part of iron and part of clay;" so this fifth kingdom, or the kingdom of Christ, is described likewise in two states, which Mr. Mede rightly distinguisheth by the names of the kingdom of the stone and the kingdom of the mountain; the first when "the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands," the second when "it became itself a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." "The stone was cut out of the mountain without hands," the kingdom of Christ was first set up, while the Roman empire was in its full strength with "legs of iron." The Roman empire was afterwards divided into ten lesser kingdoms, the remains of which are subsisting at present. The image is still standing upon his feet and toes of iron and clay; the kingdom of Christ is still "a stumblingblock and a rock of offence;" but the stone will one day "smite the image upon the feet" and toes, and destroy it utterly, and will itself "become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth:" or in other words, Rev. xi. 15, "The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever." We have therefore seen the kingdom of "the stone," but we have not yet seen the kingdom of "the mountain." Some parts of this prophecy still remain to be fulfilled: but the exact completion of the other parts will not suffer us to doubt of the accomplishment of the rest also in due season. Bp. Newton.

the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

36 ¶ This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king.

37 Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory.

38 And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold.

39 And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth.

40 And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise.

41 And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay.

42 And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly ‖ broken.

Before CHRIST 603.

46 ¶ Then the king Nebuchadnezzar fell upon his face, and worshipped Daniel, and commanded that they should offer an oblation and sweet odours unto him.

47 The king answered unto Daniel, and said, Of a truth it is, that your God is a God of gods, and a Lord of kings, and a revealer of secrets, seeing thou couldest reveal this secret.

37. Thou, O king, art a king of kings:] So Nebuchadnezzar is styled, Ezek. xxvi. 7, because he had kings for his vassals and tributaries: and so Artaxerxes, king of Persia, Ezra vii. 12. W. Lowth. It is a title given to the kings of Abyssinia at this day. Bruce.

—— for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, &c.] He might perhaps think, like some of his predecessors, that his conquests were to be ascribed to his own fortitude and prudence: see Isai. x. 13. The Prophet therefore assures him, that his success must be primarily imputed to the God of heaven. Bp. Newton.

38. —the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven] The Greek adds, "and the fish of the sea." Whatever right thy subjects can claim, either in their possessions, or in any perquisites thereto belonging, is all held of thee, as the supreme lord. Compare Jer. xxvii. 6. W. Lowth.

—— Thou art this head of gold.] See the note on ver. 32.

39. — another kingdom inferior to thee,] See the note on ver. 32, "his breast and his arms of silver."

—— another third kingdom of brass,] See the note on ver. 32, "his belly and his thighs of brass."

—— which shall bear rule over all the earth.] See what is said of Alexander of Macedonia at the beginning of the first book of Maccabees. It is reported of this mighty conqueror, that he engaged no enemy which he did not conquer; besieged no city which he did not take; and made attempts on no nation which he did not subdue. Wintle.

40. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron:] See the note on ver. 33.

44. And in the days of these kings] That is, kingdoms. See the note on ver. 34.

—— and the kingdom shall not be left to other people,] This kingdom shall not be transferred like the former ones, but shall be of a very different nature, shall crush all temporal kingdoms, and shall be universal, unchangeable, and eternal. Wintle.

45. Forasmuch as thou sawest &c.] There should not have been a full stop placed at the end of the last verse, as our translation is commonly pointed: the particle "forasmuch" carrying on the sense from the foregoing words, as in verses 40 and 41. W. Lowth.

—— the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure.] The king, hearing his dream related with such exactness, might be better assured of the truth of the interpretation, and of the great events which should follow. Bp. Newton.

46. Then the king — fell upon his face, and worshipped Daniel,] Or, "did reverence to Daniel." The king highly revered Daniel, and paid him such tokens of respect, as were consonant to Oriental manners. Wintle.

47. — Of a truth it is, that your God is a God of gods, and a Lord of kings,] Superiour to all the gods or demons, who are worshipped by men; the supreme Governour of the world, and Ruler of the kings and kingdoms in it: see ver. 21. W. Lowth.

The Jews were not only of service in their flourishing state to support true religion in the world, but under their afflictions and captivities they spread it much farther than they could before. They then became extensively useful to the nations, amongst whom necessity mixed them; as both the reasonableness of their faith, compared with heathenism, was easy to be seen; and as prophecies fulfilled, or miracles performed in their favour, could not but recommend the worship of that Being, whom they served. By these means their conqueror Nebuchadnezzar was brought to declare Him "a God of gods, and a Lord of kings, all whose works are truth, and His ways judgment," chap. iv. 37. On these accounts did Darius the Mede decree, "That in every dominion of his kingdom men should tremble and fear before the God of Daniel: for He is the living God, and stedfast for ever," chap. vi. 26. And Cyrus, whom Isaiah had foretold by name above one hundred years before his birth, for the restorer of the people from their captivity, acknowledged by a written proclamation, sent through his whole empire, that the God of the Jews

NEBUCHADNÉZZAR the king made an image of gold, whose height was threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof six cubits: he set it up in the plain of Dura, in the province of Babylon.

2 Then Nebuchadnezzar the king sent to gather together the princes, the governors, and the captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counsellers, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces, to come to the dedication of the image which Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up.

Before CHRIST about 580.

3 Then the princes, the governors, and captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counsellers, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces, were gathered together unto the dedication of the image that Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up; and they stood before the image that Nebuchadnezzar had set up.

48. — ruler over the whole province of Babylon,] When the empire came under the government of the Medes and Persians, every province had a prince or ruler appointed over it, chap. vi. 1. This may have been practised before, only afterwards improved by the addition of three presidents over the rest, chap. vi. 2, and v. 7. W. Lowth.

—— chief of the governors over all the wise men] President of the college of the Magi. Bp. Horsley.

49. — but Daniel sat in the gate of the king.] See the notes on Gen. xxiii. 10.

It was from the prophecy recorded in this chapter that the distinction first arose of the four great empires of the world, which hath been followed by most historians and chronologers in their distribution of times. These four empires, as they are the subject of this prophecy, are likewise the subject of the most celebrated pens both in former and in later ages. Not but there have been empires as great, or greater, than some of these, as those of the Tartars for instance, and of the Saracens, and of the Turks; and we may think perhaps, that they were as well deserving of a place in this succession of kingdoms, and were equally worthy to be made the objects of prophecy, being as eminent for the wisdom of their constitutions, the extent of their dominion, and the length of their duration. But these four empires had a particular relation to the church and people of God, who were subject to them in their turns. They were therefore particularly predicted; and we have in them, without the intermixture of others, a line of prophecy (as I may say) extending from the reign of Nebuchadnezzar to the full and complete establishment of the kingdom of the Messiah. He, who is Arbiter of kingdoms, and Governour of the universe, can reveal as much of their future revolutions as He pleaseth; and He hath revealed enough to manifest His providence, and to confirm the truth of religion. What Daniel said upon the first discovery of these things, well may we say, after the completion of so many particulars, "Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever: for wisdom and might are His: and He changeth the times and the seasons: He removeth kings, and setteth up kings: He giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding: He revealeth the deep and secret things: He knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with Him," ver. 20—22. Bp. Newton.

Chap. III. ver. 1. Nebuchadnezzar — made an image] The statue was probably of Bel, or some Assyrian deity; see ver. 14. It is thought to have been hollow within, like that of the Colossus of Rhodes, whose height exceeded that of the statue by ten cubits. The proportion of the height seems unequal to the breadth, unless the pedestal, on which it was placed, be included. Diodorus relates, that Xerxes took away an image of gold forty feet high, when he demolished the temple of Belus in Babylon. Dean Prideaux supposes it may have been this statue, and then the body of the image would hardly have been twenty-seven cubits high. The statue of Jupiter, made by Lysippus at Tarentum, is said to have been forty cubits. Wintle, W. Lowth.

—— in the plain of Dura,] See its probable situation near Babylon, in the map of the dominions of David and Solomon.

2. — the princes, the governors, &c.] It is difficult, if not impossible, to describe with certainty the several officers and commanders here mentioned. W. Lowth, Wintle.

4. — O people, nations, and languages,] From whatever part of the empire ye come, and whatever language ye speak: see ver. 29, and chap. iv. 1. This form of speech was designed to set forth the largeness and extent of the Babylonish empire, which had subjects of so many different languages. The same phrase was afterwards used under the Medes and Persians, chap. vi. 25; Esth. i. 22; iii. 12; viii. 9. W. Lowth.

5. — cornet, flute, harp, &c.] There is much difficulty in determining the several musical instruments here intended. Though Dr. Burney, in his History of Musick, has one whole chapter on the musick of the ancient Hebrews, yet he only enumerates the names of these instruments, by quoting the verse; and probably in his researches could not meet with sufficient data to explain them in a satisfactory manner. Wintle.

6. — the same hour] This is the first place in the Old Testament where we meet with the division of time into hours. The Greeks ascribe the invention of hours to Anaximander, or Anaximenes; who probably learned it from the Chaldeans. W. Lowth.

—— be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace.] Burning offenders alive was a punishment used among the Babylonians; see Jer. xxix. 22: and perhaps among other Eastern nations; see Ps. xxi. 9. W. Lowth. It is still inflicted on Jews and Christians for capital offences at Algiers. Dr. Shaw.

Before CHRIST about 580.

7 Therefore at that time, when all the people heard the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and all kinds of musick, all the people, the nations, and the languages, fell down and worshipped the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up.

8 ¶ Wherefore at that time certain Chaldeans came near, and accused the Jews.

9 They spake and said to the king Nebuchadnezzar, O king, live for ever.

10 Thou, O king, hast made a decree, that every man that shall hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of musick, shall fall down and worship the golden image:

11 And whoso falleth not down and worshippeth, that he should be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace.

12 There are certain Jews whom thou hast set over the affairs of the province of Babylon, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego; these men, O king, † have not regarded thee: they serve not thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

† Chald. have set no regard upon thee.

13 ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar in his rage and fury commanded to bring Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. Then they brought these men before the king.

14 Nebuchadnezzar spake and said unto them, Is it ‖ true, O Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, do not ye serve my gods, nor worship the golden image which I have set up?

‖ Or, of purpose: as Exod. 21. 13.

15 Now if ye be ready that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of musick, ye fall down and worship the image which I have made; well: but if ye worship not, ye shall be cast the same hour into the midst of a burning fiery furnace; and who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?

Before CHRIST about 580.

16 Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, answered and said to the king, O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter.

17 If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king.

18 But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

19 ¶ Then was Nebuchadnezzar † full of fury, and the form of his visage was changed against Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego: therefore he spake, and commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heated.

20 And he commanded the † most mighty men that were in his army to bind Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, and to cast them into the burning fiery furnace.

† Chald. mighty of strength.

21 Then these men were bound in their ‖ coats, their hosen, and their ‖ hats, and their other garments, and were cast into the midst of the burning fiery furnace.

‖ Or, mantles. ‖ Or, turbans.

22 Therefore because the king's † commandment was urgent, and the furnace exceeding hot, the ‖ flame of the fire slew those men that took up Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego.

† Chald. word. ‖ Or, spark.

23 And these three men, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, fell down bound into the midst of the burning fiery furnace.

24 Then Nebuchadnezzar the king was astonied, and rose up in haste, and spake, and said unto his ‖ counsellers, Did not we cast three men bound into the midst of the fire? They answered and said unto the king, True, O king.

‖ Or, governors.

25 He answered and said, Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and † they have no hurt; and the form of the fourth is like the son of God.

† Chald. there is no hurt in them.

15. — well:] The ellipsis, though familiar in the Hebrew and other ancient languages, is beautiful in this verse, and seems to point at the great wrath and overbearing impetuosity of the furious monarch, which is further denoted at the end of the verse. For a like ellipsis see Luke xiii. 9; Matt. xv. 5, 6, &c. Wintle.

—— and who is that God &c.] Thus Nebuchadnezzar exalted himself above God Almighty, as Sennacherib had done before him, 2 Kings xviii. 35. Notwithstanding he had before made a confession of the true God, chap. ii. 47. W. Lowth.

16.—we are not careful to answer thee in this matter.] In so plain a case, there is no room for deliberation: we have an answer ready at hand, that we ought to obey God rather than man. W. Lowth. See the note on chap. ii. 10.

24. Then Nebuchadnezzar &c.] The hymn of the three children follows the twenty-third verse in the Latin, Greek, and some other versions. But this is generally now agreed to be a spurious production of much later date. From a review of the hymn, however pious and well-designed, we cannot discover the usual style of Daniel, or any resemblance to the other parts of his book. Wintle.

25. — I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, &c.] This would be more easily understood, if we knew the true form of what is denominated "a furnace." Probably it was either an enclosed building, with an opening large enough to admit a full view of it; or an uncovered building, an enclosure of fire, or an area surrounded by a wall, within which the fire raged; so that Nebuchadnezzar, still seated on his throne, might see the persons in the fire. Fragments to Calmet.

—— like the son of God.] Very bright and glorious, above the possibility of all human beauty and resplendence. Bp. Hall.

Before CHRIST about 580.

26 ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar came near to the † mouth of the burning fiery furnace, and spake, and said, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, ye servants of the most high God, come forth, and come hither. Then Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, came forth of the midst of the fire.

27 And the princes, governors, and captains, and the king's counsellers, being gathered together, saw these men, upon whose bodies the fire had no power, nor was an hair of their head singed, neither were their coats changed, nor the smell of fire had passed on them.

28 Then Nebuchadnezzar spake, and said, Blessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, who hath sent his angel, and delivered his servants that trusted in him, and have changed the king's word, and yielded their bodies, that they might not serve nor worship any god, except their own God.

† Chald. a decree is made by me.

29 Therefore † I make a decree, That every people, nation, and language, which speak † any thing amiss against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, shall be [a] † cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dunghil: because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort.

[a] Chap. 2. 44.

4 ¶ I Nebuchadnezzar was at rest in mine house, and flourishing in my palace:

[b] Chap. 2. 48.

"Like a son of God," some angelick appearance: see ver. 28, and Job i. 6. Or "like the Son of God," that is, Christ: of whom Munster understanding it observes, that he thinks it no wonder that Nebuchadnezzar saw the Son of God, when He appeared to Saul, who was persecuting His disciples. Wintle.

26. — ye servants of the most high God,] This miracle calls to the king's mind the confession he had formerly made of the true God, chap. ii. 47. W. Lowth.

27. — upon whose bodies the fire had no power,] The several expressions here used are meant to shew, that not the least injury was received from the fire. The expressions rise in beautiful order. The fire not only had no prevailing power over their bodies, but neither was a hair of their head burnt, nor their flowing robes singed, nor even the smell of fire had passed on them. Compare this with Isaiah xliii. 2. Wintle.

28. — have changed the king's word,] Have rendered his command of none effect, God Himself having suspended the execution of it. W. Lowth.

29. — which speak any thing amiss against the God of Shadrach, &c.] So Darius acknowledges "the God of Daniel," chap. vi. 26, looking on Him as superiour to other gods, but not as the only true God. W. Lowth.

30. Then the king promoted Shadrach, &c.] Or, restored them to their former places and dignities. W. Lowth.

These three blessed martyrs, who bore so noble a testimony of the true religion before so many thousand witnesses, afford not only an example of suffering undauntedly for the cause of truth, but an encouragement so to suffer. When the whole creation is in flames, and all this world becomes one great fiery furnace, the faithful servants of Christ shall escape unhurt from that general conflagration. Upon their bodies the fire shall have no power: but, having endured temptation unto the end, they shall receive from the hand of God "a crown of glory that fadeth not away." Wogan.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. — Peace be multiplied unto you.] An usual form of addressing the subjects of this vast empire: see chap. vi. 25. Wintle.

3. How great are his signs! &c.] The king's repeated experience had extorted from him the sublime confession contained in this verse; the latter part of which is a fine display of the infinite power and dominion of the true God. Wintle.

4. I Nebuchadnezzar was at rest in mine house, and flourishing in my palace:] God's particular judgments often resemble the general one, in coming suddenly and unexpectedly, while men are indulging themselves in carnal security. See Ps. xxx. 6, 7; Matt. xxiv. 43, 44; 1 Thess. v. 2, 3. W. Lowth.

8. — whose name was Belteshazzar,] See the note on chap. i. 7.

—— in whom is the spirit of the holy gods:] Or, "of the holy God." The words admit of a singular sense. It must be presumed, that this king had now the one true God in his mind. Wintle. See chap. ii. 11; v. 11, 14.

10 Thus were the visions of mine head in my bed; † I saw, and behold a tree in the midst of the earth, and the height thereof was great.

† Chald. I was seeing.

11 The tree grew, and was strong, and the height thereof reached unto heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth:

12 The leaves thereof were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all: the beasts of the field had shadow under it, and the fowls of the heaven dwelt in the boughs thereof, and all flesh was fed of it.

13 I saw in the visions of my head upon my bed, and, behold, a watcher and an holy one came down from heaven;

14 He cried † aloud, and said thus, Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches, shake off his leaves, and scatter his fruit: let the beasts get away from under it, and the fowls from his branches:

15 Nevertheless leave the stump of his roots in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beasts in the grass of the earth:

16 Let his heart be changed from man's, and let a beast's heart be given unto him; and let seven times pass over him.

17 This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones: to the intent that the living may know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men.

the religion of the Magi, properly so called, was received among the Babylonians, is perhaps not altogether certain. The Magians, or worshippers of fire, were first established in Persia; (Dr. Hyde;) their sect was propagated in Persia and India, and they remain there to this time. Dean Prideaux. But it is not improbable, that their principles were well known also, and partly received, in Chaldea and Babylonia; especially as these nations were immersed in all sorts of superstition: and the name "Magi" seems to have belonged to the countries of the East in general. Wintle.

——tell me the visions of my dream — and the interpretation thereof.] Nebuchadnezzar tells the dream himself in the following words: so the meaning of this sentence must be, Tell me the dream; that is, the interpretation thereof. The Greek translates it thus: "Hear the vision of my dream, and tell me the interpretation thereof." W. Lowth.

10. — behold a tree in the midst of the earth, &c.] "The midst of the earth" is probably meant as a centre, from which the extensive circuit of his empire was described. The sovereigns of the world are often represented by large trees in the language of other countries, as well as in the prophetick language of the Hebrews; and by the shadow is denoted the protection which men may receive under government. Wintle.

13. — a watcher and an holy one] See below the note on ver. 17.

15. Nevertheless leave the stump of his roots in the earth,] As, when the root of a tree is still alive, there is a possibility of its flourishing again; so there should still be hopes that the king might recover his former state and dignity; see ver. 26. W. Lowth.

Though the tree was to be hewn down, &c. "the stump of his roots," which was to be left in the earth, was to be secured "with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field." The words of menace which follow are applicable only to a man, and plainly shew, that the whole vision was typical of some dreadful calamity, to fall for a time, but for a time only, on some one of the sons of men. Bp. Horsley.

16. Let his heart be changed &c.] Compare ver. 25. The plain interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's case, stripped of the prophetick figurative language, appears to be, that he should be punished with madness, should fancy himself a beast and live like a beast, but after some time should recover his reason and resume the government. Bp. Newton.

——let seven times pass over him.] That is, seven years: so the expression is taken, chap. xi. 13, where the Hebrew reads, "the king of the north shall come at the end of times;" that is, years. So the "time, times, and an half," mentioned chap. vii. 25; xii. 7; signify three years and a half; and are accordingly explained by "forty and two months," Rev. xi. 2; and by 1260 days, Rev. xii. 6: both which reckonings of time are equivalent to three years and an half. W. Lowth.

17. —the watchers, — the holy ones:] It is the opinion of commentators in general, that by these titles are to be understood angelick beings, who are the instruments of God, and messengers to execute God's judgments. And Stackhouse observes, after Calmet, that from some expressions in this verse it looks as if the Chaldeans had a notion, (for the king, we may suppose, speaks according to the sentiments of the nation,) that these "watchers" or "holy ones" in heaven constituted an assembly of judges, or were an order of blessed spirits, who took under their cognizance and decision the fate of men. Bp. Horsley however has suggested, that these appellations denote the Persons in the Godhead; the first describing Them by the vigilance of Their universal providence; the second, by the transcendent sanctity of Their nature: and he observes, that it is not the mere execution of the judgment upon Nebuchadnezzar, but the decree itself, which is ascribed to Them; that the whole matter originated in Their decree, and at Their command the decree was executed; and that in perfect consistency with this exposition we find, in the 24th verse, that this decree of "the watchers" and "the holy ones" is "the decree of the most High" God. Edit.

——to the intent that the living may know &c.] The intent of this matter was to give mankind a proof, in the fall and restoration of this mighty monarch, that the fortunes of kings and empires are in the hand of God; that His providence perpetually interposes in the affairs of men, distributing crowns and sceptres always for the good of the faithful primarily, ultimately of His whole creation, but according to His will: by which we must understand a will perfectly independent, and unbiassed by any thing external; yet not an arbitrary will, but a will directed by the governing perfections of the Divine intellect; by God's own goodness and wisdom; and as justice is included in the idea of goodness, it must be a will governed by God's justice. Bp. Horsley.

——the basest of men.] This regards Nebuchadnezzar, either with respect to his present condition, whose pride and cruelty rendered him as despicable in the sight of God, as his high estate made him appear honourable in the sight of man: and therefore he was justly doomed to so low a degree of abasement; or else it may be understood of his wonderful advancement and restoration, after he had been degraded from his dignity; and sent to herd with the beasts of the field. God thereby asserting that prerogative of His, of "bringing low and lifting up:" and of "raising the beggar from the dunghill, to set him among princes," 1 Sam. ii. 8, 9; Ps. cxiii. 7, 8. W. Lowth.

have seen. Now thou, O Belteshazzar, declare the interpretation thereof, forasmuch as all the wise men of my kingdom are not able to make known unto me the interpretation: but thou art able; for the spirit of the holy gods is in thee.

19 ¶ Then Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, was astonied for one hour, and his thoughts troubled him. The king spake, and said, Belteshazzar, let not the dream, or the interpretation thereof, trouble thee. Belteshazzar answered and said, My lord, the dream be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine enemies.

20 The tree that thou sawest, which grew, and was strong, whose height reached unto the heaven, and the sight thereof to all the earth;

21 Whose leaves were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all; under which the beasts of the field dwelt, and upon whose branches the fowls of the heaven had their habitation:

22 It is thou, O king, that art grown and become strong: for thy greatness is grown, and reacheth unto heaven, and thy dominion to the end of the earth.

23 And whereas the king saw a watcher and an holy one coming down from heaven, and saying, Hew the tree down, and destroy it; yet leave the stump of the roots thereof in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beasts of the field, till seven times pass over him;

24 This is the interpretation, O king, and this is the decree of the most High, which is come upon my lord the king:

25 That they shall [c] drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field, and they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and they shall wet thee with the dew of heaven, and seven times shall pass over thee, till thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

26 And whereas they commanded to leave the stump of the tree roots; thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the heavens do rule.

27 Wherefore, O king, let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor; if it may be ‖ a lengthening of thy tranquillity.

‖ Or, an healing of thine error.

28 ¶ All this came upon the king Nebuchadnezzar.

29 At the end of twelve months he walked ‖ in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon.

‖ Or, upon.

30 The king spake, and said, Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?

31 While the word was in the king's mouth, there fell a voice from heaven, saying, O king Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken; The kingdom is departed from thee.

32 And they shall drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field: they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and seven times shall pass over thee, until thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

26. — thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee,] That a dispensation of judgment should be tempered with such signal mercy to a heathen prince, not, like Cyrus, eminent for his virtues, however distinguished by his talents, is perhaps in some degree to be put to the account of the favour he shewed to many of the Jews his captives, and in particular to his constant patronage of the Prophet Daniel. Bp. Horsley.

27. — break off thy sins by righteousness, &c.] The plain meaning of this counsel given to the king is, that he should "do justly, and love mercy," should practise those great duties of justice and charity towards mankind, in which he had been hitherto remarkably deficient; then, as it follows, Perhaps there shall be a prolongation to thy tranquillity, or peace; that is, his punishment might be remitted, and his felicity continued for a longer term: not unlike the case of Hezekiah in Isaiah, chap. xxxviii; or that of the Ninevites, recorded by the Prophet Jonah. See also Jer. xviii. Wintle.

28. All this came upon the king Nebuchadnezzar.] Strange as it must seem, notwithstanding Daniel's weight and credit with the king; notwithstanding the consternation of mind, into which the dream had thrown him; this warning had no permanent effect. He was not cured of his overweening pride and vanity, till he was overtaken by the threatened judgment. Bp. Horsley.

29. — he walked in the palace] Or, "he was walking upon the palace." It is well known that the roofs of the buildings in the East were flat or plain, over which the inhabitants used to walk for pleasure. Wintle. See the note on 2 Sam. xi. 2.

30. — great Babylon, that I have built] It is frequently expressed in Scripture that a person has built a city, who has enlarged, repaired, or fortified it. See 2 Chron. xi. 6; 2 Kings xiv. 22.

Whatever we read of the original construction of Babylon by Nimrod or Belus, or of its enlargement by Semiramis, yet it was either of little account, or certainly not as one of the wonders of the world, till the walls with their hundred gates, the temple of Belus, the monarch's most magnificent palace, the hanging gardens, and other grand works and improvements, were added by the king, who is said to have "built" it. Wintle.

1 Belshazzar's impious feast. 5 A handwriting, unknown to the magicians, troubleth the king. 10 At the commendation of the queen Daniel is brought. 17 He, reproving the king of pride and idolatry, 25 readeth and interpreteth the writing. 30 The monarchy is translated to the Medes.

about 538. BELSHAZZAR the king made a great feast to a thousand of his lords, and drank wine before the thousand.

2 Belshazzar, whiles he tasted the wine, commanded to bring the golden and silver vessels which his father Nebuchadnezzar had † taken out of the temple which was in Jerusalem; that the king, and his princes, his wives, and his concubines, might drink therein.

† Chald. brought forth.

3 Then they brought the golden vessels that were taken out of the temple of the house of God which was at Jerusalem; and the king, and his princes, his wives, and his concubines, drank in them.

4 They drank wine, and praised the gods of gold, and of silver, of brass, of iron, of wood, and of stone.

34. — I Nebuchadnezzar lifted up mine eyes] The first indication of the recovery is noted by a reverse of the cause of the fall. At the expiration of the term, or at the end of seven years, Nebuchadnezzar lifted up his eyes unto heaven, and his understanding or mind returned; he acknowledged against whom he had transgressed by his pride, and looked up unto Him when he was restored. The following acts of praise are the suitable returns of a mind truly penitent, and deeply sensible of its faults and of the mercies it had received. Wintle.

37. Now I Nebuchadnezzar praise and extol and honour the King of heaven,] We shall not find in history a more awful example and monument of Providence, than the vicissitudes of Nebuchadnezzar's life afford. Raised gradually to the pinnacle of power and human glory by a long train of those brilliant actions and successes, which man is too apt to ascribe to himself, (the proximate causes being indeed in himself and in the instruments he uses, although Providence is always the prime efficient,) he was suddenly cast down from it, and, after a time, as suddenly restored, without any natural or human means. His humiliation was not the effect of any reverse of fortune, of any publick disaster, or any mismanagement of the affairs of his empire. At the expiration of a twelvemonth from his dream, the king, still at rest in his house, and flourishing in his palace, surveying his city, and exulting in the monuments of his own greatness, which it presented to his eye, was smitten by an invisible hand. As the event stood unconnected with any known natural cause, it must have been beyond the ken of any foresight short of the Divine; and it follows incontestably, that the prediction and the accomplishment of it were both from God. The king's restoration to power and grandeur had also been predicted; and this took place at the predicted time, independently of any natural cause, and without the use of any human means. And the evidence of these extraordinary occurrences; of the prediction, the fall, and the restoration; is perhaps the most undeniable of any thing which rests upon mere human testimony. The king himself, upon his recovery, published a proclamation in every part of his vast empire, giving an account of all which had befallen him, and in conclusion giving praise and honour to the King of heaven, acknowledging that "all His works are truth, and His ways judgment, and that those who walk in pride He is able to abase." The evidence of the whole fact therefore stands upon this publick record of the Babylonian empire, which was preserved word for word in this chapter, of which it makes indeed the whole. This chapter therefore is not Daniel's writing, but Nebuchadnezzar's. Bp. Horsley.

Chap. V. ver. 1. Belshazzar the king made a great feast &c.] This feast was made at a time of publick rejoicing, being an annual festival, when the whole night was spent in revelling: of which season Cyrus took the advantage to make himself master of the city, as Herodotus and Xenophon relate, and as was foretold by Jeremiah, chap. li. 39, 57. W. Lowth.

2. — whiles he tasted the wine,] The expression seems to allude to that part of the libation, in which the wine was tasted at the time of a sacrifice or a festal solemnity. This "impious king," as he is called by Xenophon, in making the libations, ordered the vessels of Jehovah to be introduced for these purposes, thus impiously prostituting the most sacred instruments of the temple of the true God to the idolatrous services of pagan superstition; or, if the impiety was not so gross, at least the sacred vessels were applied to common uses, and to the purposes of intemperance and excess. Wintle.

—— his father Nebuchadnezzar] Rather, his grandfather. Nebuchadnezzar was succeeded by his son Iloarudam, according to Ptolemy, who is the Evil-merodach of Jeremiah: he married a discreet and prudent woman, called Nitocris, from whom was born Nabonadius or Belshazzar. Wintle. See the notes on Exod. ii. 18; and Jer. xxvii. 7.

4. — praised the gods of gold,] As they drank their wine in these once hallowed vessels, they triumphed over that God, to whom they had been consecrated; and magnified the power of their idols of gold and silver, &c. as if by their might these victories had been achieved, and these rich spoils obtained. Bp. Hall. Such a wanton and sacrilegious insult deserved and called for exemplary punishment. Wintle.

5. In the same hour came forth fingers &c.] In the very same hour, while they were offering this affront to the God of heaven, it pleased the just and powerful God to shew, that He took notice of this presumptuous impiety. Bp. Hall. Next to murder, no sin is so remarkably punished in this world as that of sacrilege, as appears by innumerable instances, taken out of the histories of all ages, of heathens and infidels, as well as Jews and Christians. W. Lowth.

6. Then the king's countenance was changed, &c.] The very great confusion and uneasiness of Belshazzar at the sight of the hand shews, that nothing is more weak and timorous than a guilty conscience; and that the Divine judgments overtake the ungodly, when they think themselves most secure. Ostervald.

7. —shall be clothed with scarlet, and have a chain of gold &c.] Gold chains are a mark of dignity in Abyssinia, bestowed by the sovereign on the most meritorious persons in his army. It is usual to give a splendid suit of clothes at the same time; an Egyptian and Persian custom. See Gen. xli. 42; Esth. viii. 15. Bruce.

——the third ruler in the kingdom.] Perhaps, next to the king and the king's son. Grotius.

11. There is a man in thy kingdom, &c.] Some persons are apt to wonder that Daniel was unknown to Belshazzar, which others have accounted for from the abandoned and indolent character of the king; but there is a farther reason, which Mr. Harmer has hinted from Sir John Chardin; namely, that he was displaced at the death of a prior king; since in the East, when a king dies, the physicians and astrologers are removed, the one for not having driven away death, the other for not having predicted it. But after all Daniel was not perhaps totally unknown, at least by report, to this king; however he was probably of no esteem, or employed in no considerable department in the state, in the early part of his reign, and therefore not readily recollected. Wintle.

12. —dissolving of doubts,] Literally, "of knots," as in the margin. It appears from Sir John Chardin, that this phrase is still in use in Persia: a patent given to him by the king of Persia speaks of "superintendents, who unloose all sorts of knots." Fragments to Calmet.

IT pleased Darius to set over the kingdom an hundred and twenty princes, which should be over the whole kingdom; about 538.

20. — and they took his glory from him:] Or, "his glory was taken from him," according to the Hebrew phraseology. W. Lowth. The authority of Nebuchadnezzar was raised in the last verse to the highest pitch; and on that account we find here, that his heart was elated, and his spirit grown obdurate in proud and arrogant behaviour, instead of ascribing all his honours and advantages to the real giver of them, the true God, whom he had been brought to acknowledge; and to the neglect of whom, and of improvement from his ancestor's sufferings, Belshazzar's fate is by the Prophet so justly and judiciously attributed. Wintle.

26. — MENE; God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it.] "MENE," to number; that is, to fix bounds to a thing, or the period of its continuance. Wintle.

The determinate number of years which God hath appointed for the continuance of thy reign, and the Babylonish monarchy, is finished. So God is said to number the months of man's life, and to appoint him "bounds that he cannot pass," Job xiv. 5. The word "MENE" is doubled in the foregoing verse, to shew that the thing is certain, and "established by God," as Joseph tells Pharaoh in the like case, Gen. xli. 32. W. Lowth.

27. TEKEL; Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting.] Wicked men are often compared to silver adulterated, and alloyed with baser metals, which makes it too light, when weighed in the balances; see Jer. vi. 30; Ezek. xxii. 18. W. Lowth. "Tekel" signifies to weigh. The meaning here is, that the Almighty had weighed, or made a due estimate of, the conduct of Belshazzar, according to the just and impartial measures of His providence; and had found him light or deficient, a man of no account, unworthy of a kingdom, and a fit object of Divine vengeance. Wintle.

28. PERES; Thy kingdom is divided, &c.] The verb paras, from whence "peres" is derived as an appellative, signifies to divide or break: it is likewise the proper name of the Persians, who were to be sharers in the division of the Babylonish empire. "Upharsin" in the 25th verse literally signifies "and they divide." W. Lowth.

29. — and they clothed Daniel with scarlet,] The coming out from the presence of princes in a dress presented to the wearer as a mark of distinction, is an honour still practised in the East. They are conferred sometimes merely as an honour, and sometimes as an ensign of office. Harmer, Sir J. Chardin.

30. In that night was Belshazzar the king of the Chaldeans slain.] And from the next verse it appears, that the Babylonian or Chaldean kingdom expired with him.

The punishment of Nebuchadnezzar, the death of Belshazzar, and the expiration of the kingdom, may remind us of that fine passage of the wise Son of Sirach, contained in Ecclus. x. 12—18. Wintle.

31. And Darius the Median took the kingdom,] This Darius is said to be of the "seed of the Medes," chap. ix. 1; and is supposed by the most judicious chronologers to be the same with Cyaxares, the son of Astyages: him Cyrus made king of the Chaldeans, as being his uncle by his mother's side, and his partner in carrying on the war against the Babylonians, and left him the palace of the king of Babylon, to live there whenever he pleased, as Xenophon relates. The Chaldee phrase, rendered here, "took the kingdom," is translated "possessed the kingdom," chap. vii. 18; and means the same with succeeding to the kingdom. W. Lowth. Josephus says, that this Darius was the son of Astyages, and that the Greeks called him by another name: what this other name, given by the Greeks to the son and successor of Astyages, was, we learn from Xenophon, who tells us it was Cyaxares. Bp. Hallifax.

The judgment recorded in this chapter is a visible proof of the Divine vengeance on those, whose heart is lifted up by prosperity; on the profane and ungodly, who, instead of reverencing Him from whom they receive life, and breath, and all things, have the insolence to exalt themselves against Him; and on those, who do not improve the warnings He gives them, the afflictions He visits them with, nor the examples He sets before their eyes. Ostervald.

13 Then answered they and said before the king, That Daniel, which is of the children of the captivity of Judah, regardeth not thee, O king, nor the decree that thou hast signed, but maketh his petition three times a day.

Xenophon mentions the same fact, only he ascribes the institution of these satraps, as he calls them, to Cyrus; and, no doubt, Cyrus's uncle, Darius, called by Xenophon Cyaxares, did not appoint them without his nephew's advice and concurrence. Parkhurst. These "princes" were according to the number of the provinces, which were subject to the Medo-Persian empire. These were afterwards enlarged to an hundred and twenty-seven by the victories of Cambyses and Darius Hystaspes. See Esth. i. 1. W. Lowth.

2. — three presidents; of whom Daniel was first:] He had been appointed one of the principal officers of state by Belshazzar, chap. v. 29. W. Lowth.

8. — according to the law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not.] After it is once enacted by the king, with the consent of his counsellors. W. Lowth. See the notes at Esth. viii. 11; ix. 16.

9. Wherefore king Darius signed the writing and the decree.] Thus was atheism established by the law in the court, city, and empire of Babylon, for the space of one month. Bp. Horne.

10. Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; &c.] He did his duty exactly according to his usual custom, as if nothing had happened, and no law had been passed, or any thing said at court about it. He would not go to any other place, where his enemies might not have found him, but "went to his own house," whither he might suppose they would follow him. He would not secrete himself in any private or remote corner of the house, but repaired forthwith to his own "chamber," the place whereunto he always resorted. He thought it not enough to pray inwardly with his mind, which he might have done in any posture, without being perceived, but made his body bear its accustomed part in the service: "he kneeled upon his knees." He contented not himself with praying once or twice only, dropping the third time in the middle of the day, on account of the imminent danger he was in, but made up his full and usual complement: "he kneeled upon his knees three times a day." Nor did he pray only, and not give thanks, cutting off some part of the service, to make the time of danger shorter, but performed the whole, without curtailing or diminishing aught: "he prayed and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime." And, in short, he would not so much as shut his windows, but did all this, "his windows in his chamber being open toward Jerusalem." In order to shew the meaning of this last circumstance, we must have recourse to a noble passage in king Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple, which Daniel had in his eye, and by which he directed his conduct. (See 1 Kings viii. 46—50, especially the latter part of the 48th verse.) The circumstance therefore of "praying toward Jerusalem" being thus enjoined, Daniel would by no means omit it. And now let us consider with ourselves, how clear the conscience, how holy the soul, how steadfast the faith, how lively the hope, how fervent the charity, how invincible the courage, of Daniel must have been, who, in such circumstances, could calmly and composedly go on in the regular and exact performance of his stated devotions. Let us consider of how great consequence the due performance of them is, if, with death in its most horrible form before his eyes, he thought he could not justify a single omission of them. And whenever we are tempted to neglect our prayers, let us remember that Daniel, though the den of lions was to be the consequence, "kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime." Bp. Horne.

—— his windows being open &c.] The like practice we find observed by Sara, the daughter of Raguel, in Tobit iii. 11, that "she prayed toward the window;" and, we may presume, for the same devout reason. This was the custom of the Jews in their captivities and dispersions. Wogan.

and set his heart on Daniel to deliver him: and he laboured till the going down of the sun to deliver him.

15 Then these men assembled unto the king, and said unto the king, Know, O king, that the law of the Medes and Persians is, That no decree nor statute which the king establisheth may be changed.

16 Then the king commanded, and they brought Daniel, and cast him into the den of lions. Now the king spake and said unto Daniel, Thy God whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee.

17 And a stone was brought, and laid upon the mouth of the den; and the king sealed it with his own signet, and with the signet of his lords; that the purpose might not be changed concerning Daniel.

18 ¶ Then the king went to his palace, and passed the night fasting: neither were ‖ instruments of musick brought before him: and his sleep went from him.

19 Then the king arose very early in the morning, and went in haste unto the den of lions.

20 And when he came to the den, he cried with a lamentable voice unto Daniel: and the king spake and said to Daniel, O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions?

21 Then said Daniel unto the king, O king, live for ever.

22 My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me: forasmuch as before him innocency was found in me; and also before thee, O king, have I done no hurt.

Before CHRIST about 537.

23 Then was the king exceeding glad for him, and commanded that they should take Daniel up out of the den. So Daniel was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God.

24 ¶ And the king commanded, and they brought those men which had accused Daniel, and they cast them into the den of lions, them, their children, and their wives; and the lions had the mastery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came at the bottom of the den.

25 ¶ Then king Darius wrote unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; Peace be multiplied unto you.

26 I make a decree, That in every dominion of my kingdom men tremble and fear before the God of Daniel: for he is the living God, and stedfast for ever, and his kingdom that which shall not be [d] destroyed, and his dominion shall be even unto the end.

1 Daniel's vision of four beasts. 9 Of God's kingdom. 15 The interpretation thereof.

16. — he will deliver thee.] Rather, "May He deliver thee." The words express the king's hopes and good wishes, but no certain persuasion. See ver. 20. Wintle, W. Lowth.

17. And a stone was brought, and laid upon the mouth of the den; &c.] We see herein the hand of Providence, whose goodness in saving His servant, and power in defeating the malice of his enemies, were made the more conspicuous by the very method used to prevent the Prophet's escape. The stone is sealed, not only with the king's signet, but with the signet also of his lords, that so it might not be in the power of either to change the purpose concerning Daniel. This deliverance therefore appeared to be the sole work of God, and not of man. And as by this accrued the greater glory to God, so it effectually established the honour and safety of His Prophet. Wogan.

22. — forasmuch as before him innocency was found in me;] The Prophet, having justly offended neither God nor the king, very truly offers the righteousness of his cause as the reason of the Divine interference for his security; not from any ostentatious display of his own merit, but to direct the attention of the king to the power and providence of that great Being who is "mighty to save," and whose favour is more to be regarded than life itself. Wintle.

—— before thee, O king, have I done no hurt.] Though I disobeyed thy decree, it was not done out of contumacy or stubbornness, but purely to preserve a good conscience, which is the only true principle of loyalty and obedience: see Rom. xiii. 5. W. Lowth.

24. — and the lions had the mastery of them, &c.] The ravenous seizure of these wretched criminals and their families by the lions, "or ever they came at the bottom of the den," proved at once the protection of God over His servant, in shutting their mouths that they hurt him not, and His vengeance against the accusers of Daniel, in permitting the lions to satisfy their hunger by devouring them so greedily. Wogan.

28. — in the reign of Cyrus the Persian.] Who upon Darius's death took possession of the whole monarchy of the Medes and Persians, called from him the Persian monarchy. See Ezra i. 2. W. Lowth.

The example of Daniel not only strips us of every excuse for not performing our devotions, but gives us likewise instructions how to perform them with regard to place, posture, time, and matter. And let the blessed effect and reward of his devotion fire our souls to an imitation of so great and glorious an example. Would we be delivered from the power of the devil, and the bitter pains of eternal death? would we be holy, and just, and good? would we be filled with wisdom and understanding in the counsels of God? would we be high in the favour of Heaven? nay, would we be saved from temporal calamities, and brought to honour, esteem, and reverence, in the sight of men? Constancy in prayer can open a way to all these blessings. Bp. Horne.

Chap. VII. The historical part of the book of Daniel was finished with the last chapter; the remaining part of this book acquaints us with the visions, which at different times were com-

IN the first year of Belshazzar king of Babylon Daniel † had a dream and visions of his head upon his bed: then he wrote the dream, and told the sum of the ‖ matters.

2 Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and, behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea.

3 And four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another.

4 The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings: I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, ‖ and it was lifted up from the earth, and made stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given to it.

municated to the Prophet himself. The interval of time from the first to the last of these visions, is about one or two and twenty years, that is, from the first year of Belshazzar, mentioned at the beginning of this chapter, to the third year of Cyrus at the beginning of chapter x. The first vision, or dream, is contained in the seventh chapter, and is the only one that is written in the Chaldee language; and perhaps the similarity of it to the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, which the Prophet had related and expounded at chap. ii, might have been one reason why this same language was here adopted; and the benefit designed by it for the impious king, in whose reign it was delivered, another. What was there prefigured by a large statue, composed of various metals, is here pointed at by a very different sort of emblem; each suited to the disposition or character of the persons to whom the communications were made. Four beasts are, in this dream, designed to signify the four great monarchies, or kingdoms, according to the interpretation of an angel; and some circumstances, relating to the fourth beast, are probably intended to shadow forth a series of events, which were to reach to the latest ages of the world. Wintle.

Ver. 1. In the first year of Belshazzar] This was about seventeen years before the history contained in the last chapter: see the dates in the margin. W. Lowth.

3. —four great beasts came up from the sea,] These beasts are indeed monstrous productions: but such emblems were usual among the Eastern nations; a winged lion, and such fictitious animals, may still be seen in the ruins of Persepolis, according to Sir John Chardin and other travellers. Bp. Newton.

4. The first was like a lion, &c.] This is the kingdom of the Babylonians: and the king of Babylon is in like manner compared to a lion by Jeremiah, chap. iv. 7; and is said to fly as an eagle, chap. xlviii. 40; and he is also compared to an eagle by Ezekiel, chap. xvii. 3, 12. The lion is esteemed the king of beasts, and the eagle the king of birds; and therefore the kingdom of Babylon, which is described as the first and noblest kingdom, and was the kingdom then in being, is said to partake of the nature of both. "The eagle's wings" denote its swiftness and rapidity; and the conquests of Babylon were very rapid, that empire being advanced to the height within a few years by a single person, by the conduct and arms of Nebuchadnezzar. It is farther said, "the wings thereof were plucked, and it was lifted up from the earth," that is, it was taken away from the earth, as it is commonly understood, and as it is translated in almost all the ancient versions; or it may be rendered thus, "the wings thereof were plucked wherewith it was lifted up from the earth," as Grotius explains it, and as we read in the margin of our Bibles. Its wings were beginning to be plucked at the delivery of this prophecy: for at this time the Medes and Persians were encroaching upon it; Belshazzar, the king now reigning, was the last of his race; and in the seventeenth year of his reign Babylon was taken, and the kingdom was transferred to the Medes and Persians. Bp. Newton.

Though the dream of Nebuchadnezzar concerning the image, and this of Daniel's beasts, agree in their general sense and interpretation, yet there are circumstances added to the latter, as well as some points more plainly illustrated, than they were in the former. Nebuchadnezzar saw his kingdom flourishing; Daniel saw it when its wings were plucked, and its end approaching. Other particulars will be readily observed by the attentive reader in the subsequent parts of the vision. Wintle.

—— made stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given to it.] The probable sense of this passage is, that, after the Babylonian empire was subverted, the people became more humane and gentle; their minds were humbled with their fortune; and they, who vaunted as if they had been gods, now felt themselves to be but men. They were brought to such a sense as the Psalmist wishes such persons to have, "Put them in fear, O Lord: that the nations may know themselves to be but men." Bp. Newton.

5. And behold another beast, &c.] This is the kingdom of the Medes and Persians: and for their cruelty and greediness after blood they are compared to a "bear," which is a most voracious and cruel animal: the resemblance is alluded to in the following words, "Arise, devour much flesh." A bear, saith Aristotle, is an all-devouring animal: and so, saith Grotius, the Medo-Persians were great robbers and spoilers according to Jeremiah, chap. li. 48, 56. Bp. Newton.

—— it raised up itself on one side,] Or, it may be as in the margin, "it raised up one dominion:" that is, it made up one empire out of the joint powers of Media and Persia. W. Lowth.

—— and it had three ribs in the mouth of it between the teeth of it:] These are sometimes understood of the three kingdoms of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians, reduced into one: but Sir Isaac Newton and Bp. Chandler with greater propriety explain them to signify the kingdoms of Babylon, Lydia, and Egypt, which were conquered by the second beast, but were not properly parts or members of its body. They might be called "ribs," as the conquest of them much strengthened the Persian empire; and they might be said to be "between the teeth of the bear," as they were much harassed and oppressed by the Persians. Bp. Newton.

—— and they said thus unto it, Arise, devour much flesh.] This was said, as before intimated, to denote the cruelty of the Medes and Persians. They are also represented as very cruel by Isaiah, chap. xiii. 18. Cambyses, Ochus, and others of their princes, were indeed more like bears than men. Instances of their cruelty abound in almost all historians, who have written of their affairs. Bp. Newton.

6. — lo another, like a leopard,] This is the kingdom of the Macedonians, or Grecians, who under the command of Alexander the Great overcame the Persians, and reigned next after them. The leopard is remarkable for its swiftness; see Hab. i. 8; and for the impetuosity with which it springs upon its prey: and Alexander and the Macedonians were amazingly swift and rapid in their conquests. This rapidity is further intimated by the "four wings on the back" of the beast. The Babylonian empire was represented with two wings, but this with four; for, as St. Jerome saith, nothing was swifter than the victories of Alexander. The "four heads" of the beast denote the four kingdoms, into which the empire of Alexander was divided at his death by his four captains; Cassander reigning over Macedon and Greece, Lysimachus over Thrace and Bithynia, Ptolemy over Egypt, and Seleucus over Syria. Bp. Newton. And if we reflect on the small beginnings of this power, the difficulties it four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given to it.

7 After this I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns.

8 I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things.

Before CHRIST about 555.

9 ¶ I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool: his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire.

which it surmounted, and the vast strides it made towards universal empire, extending its conquests as far as the Ganges in so short a space as twelve years, 1 Mac. i. 7, we shall not be at a loss to assign a just interpretation to the last clause of this verse, and to conclude that such "dominion was given to it" by God. Wintle.

7. — behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly;] Daniel was curious to know particularly what this beast might mean; see ver. 19; and was answered by the angel in the 23d verse. This fourth kingdom can be no other than the Roman empire, which was "dreadful, and terrible, and strong exceedingly," beyond any of the former kingdoms. It was "diverse from all kingdoms," not only in its republican form of government, but likewise in strength, and power, and greatness, length of duration, and extent of dominion. "It devoured, and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it:" it reduced Macedon into a Roman province about 168 years, the kingdom of Pergamus about 133 years, Syria about 65 years, and Egypt about 30 years, before Christ. And besides the remains of the Macedonian empire, it subdued many other provinces and kingdoms, so that it might by a very usual figure be said to "devour the whole earth, and to tread it down, and break it in pieces;" and became in a manner what the Roman writers delighted to call it, the empire of the whole world. Bp. Newton.

Daniel has not described the shape of this beast, but St. John has supplied the deficiency; representing it in the Apocalypse as compounded of all the rest, or combining their destructive qualities, having "the body of the leopard, the feet of the bear, and the mouth of the lion," and exceeding them in having seven heads, but with the same number of ten horns, which marks its identity with Daniel's fourth beast, Rev. xiii. 1, 2. Dr. Hales.

—— stamped the residue with the feet of it:] This alludes to the fury of wild beasts, which stamp upon that part of their prey that they cannot devour. W. Lowth.

—— and it had ten horns.] Another remarkable property of this fourth beast is, that "it had ten horns:" and according to the angel's interpretation, ver. 24, "the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings," or kingdoms, "that shall arise." "Four kings" a little before, ver. 17, signified four kingdoms: and so here "ten kings" are ten kingdoms, according to the usual phraseology of Scripture. We must look for these kingdoms amid the broken pieces of the Roman empire, represented under the fourth beast. The Roman empire was, by means of the incursions of the northern nations, dismembered into ten kingdoms; and Machiavel hath given us their names; 1. the Ostrogoths in Mæsia; 2. the Visigoths in Pannonia; 3. the Sueves and Alans in Gascoigne and Spain; 4. the Vandals in Africa; 5. the Franks in France; 6. the Burgundians in Burgundy; 7. the Heruli and Turingi in Italy; 8. the Saxons and Angles in Britain; 9. the Huns in Hungary; 10. the Lombards, at first upon the Danube, afterwards in Italy. Bp. Newton.

The names of these ten kingdoms have been enumerated by several writers of the most respectable authority; and the few variations in their accounts may be readily explained from the confusion and uncertainty of the times of which they wrote. It is enough for us, and an illustrious verification of the prophecies of Holy Scripture, that such a partition was noticed long before by Daniel; and that among other particularities mentioned as incident to the fourth beast, this of ten horns springing all together from its head was recorded as one, and that these horns were expressly interpreted to mean ten kings or kingdoms. Bp. Hallifax.

8. — behold, there came up among them another little horn,] In all the several respects, which the Prophet notices, the Pope fully answers the character of the "little horn;" so that if exquisite fitness of application may assure us of the true sense of the prophecy, we can have no doubt concerning the person. He is here called "a little horn:" and the power of the popes was originally very small, and their temporal dominions were little, and inconsiderable in comparison with others of the ten horns. Bp. Newton. For the several points of resemblance, see the notes on ver. 20, 21, 24, 25.

—— before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots:] Three of the ten kingdoms, namely, those of the Heruli, the Ostrogoths, and the Lombards, were successively plucked up or eradicated before the little horn, in the way of which they stood: and by the annexation of their dominions to the papacy, the Pope became also a temporal power. Hence he assumed the three keys in his arms, and the triple crown or mitre, as a temporal prince; and "his look was more stout than his fellows," whom he frequently awed by his anathemas and excommunications. Dr. Hales.

—— in this horn were eyes &c.] See below on ver. 20.

9. I beheld till the thrones were cast down, &c.] That is, till all the earthly kingdoms were brought to an end: but the word may be rendered "were pitched" or set down, for the reception of the Deity, and the saints who sat by Him; see Matt. xix. 28, and Rev. iv. 4; and this sense the versions follow. Wintle.

The fourth monarchy being to continue till the consummation of all things, the general judgment is described in this and the following verses, wherein sentence was to pass upon this fourth beast, and an end to be put to his dominion. W. Lowth.

—— the Ancient of days] The eternal Judge of the world; see Rev. xvi. 5; He that was from the beginning, 1 John ii. 14: who is elsewhere described "covering Himself with light as with a garment," Ps. civ. 2; and as a clear and unspotted brightness, 1 John i. 5. W. Lowth.

By this term is undoubtedly meant the Deity, the supreme eternal Spirit, whom the Prophet thus describes, to adapt himself to human apprehensions, and to make the following part of his descriptions more intelligible; but no similitude is pointed out, nor ought we from hence to attempt to represent by any figure the invisible God. Image-worship was not allowed the Jews under a less perfect dispensation, and therefore must be very ill-suited to the spirituality of the Christian service. The purity and sanctity of the Divine nature are next shadowed forth by similar allusions. The throne and wheels of fire at the conclusion of this verse may serve to denote His dread majesty, that pierces and penetrates all things, summons all to His judgment, and executes in an instant His sovereign will and final determinations. See Rev. iv. 2, &c. and Ezek. i. 26. Grotius observes, the ancient thrones and curule chairs had wheels. Wintle.

10. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him:] Lightnings and streams of fire were His harbingers, to give notice of His speedy approach. Compare Ps. l. 3; xcvii. 3. W. Lowth.

—— thousand thousands ministered unto him, &c.] His retinue was an innumerable company of angels. See Deut. xxxiii. 2; Ps. lxviii. 17; Heb. xii. 22; Rev. v. 11. W. Lowth. This is a figurative description of the last judgment, probably taken from the Jewish courts of justice. Wintle.

11. I beheld then because of the voice of the great words &c.] The final overthrow, or total abolition of this beast, on account of the blasphemies or presumptions of the eleventh horn, is here described; and the reference is probably to that awful reckoning, when the beast and the false prophet were to be cast alive into a lake of fire, burning with brimstone; and to this the fire, the judgment, and the entire destruction of the beast naturally lead our attention. See Rev. xix. 20. Wintle.

12. As concerning the rest of the beasts, &c.] As to the three first monarchies, though the succeeding monarchy took away the dominion of that which went before, yet it was not done all at once, but by degrees: and the nations, where those monarchies were seated, still had a being, though they changed their masters. Whereas the destruction of the last monarchy implied the putting of an end to that empire and to all other earthly governments: the kingdom of Christ being then immediately to take place. See ver. 13, 14; chap. ii. 34. W. Lowth.

13. —behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven,] One in the shape and likeness of a man; but clothed with such ensigns of majesty, as shewed Him to be an extraordinary Person; (see the note upon Ezek. ii. 1; and compare Rev. i. 13; xiv. 14;) indeed no less than the Messiah, as the description of Him that followeth doth declare. The two foregoing verses having explained why the fourth beast was destroyed, this part of the verse shews by whom it was done, represents Christ in His judicial capacity, and describes Him by the title He often gives Himself, "the Son of man," in allusion to this place: particularly He alludes to this text, Matt. xxvi. 64, where He speaks of His coming in "the clouds of heaven," by which expression He acknowledged himself to be Messias here described; and gave a direct answer to the question proposed to Him, "Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?" compare Mark xiv. 61, 62; Rev. i. 7: whereupon they condemned Him as guilty of blasphemy. W. Lowth.

—— and they brought him near before him.] To signify that Christ received His kingdom from His Father: see Matt. xi. 27; xxviii. 18; John iii. 35; 1 Cor. xv. 27; Eph. i. 21; Phil. ii. 9, 10; Rev. v. 7. Compare Jer. xxx. 21. W. Lowth. To take at His hands investiture of His new dignity, this exercise of His universal and everlasting kingdom. Bp. Chandler.

14. And there was given him dominion, &c.] All these kingdoms shall in their turns be destroyed, but the kingdom of the Messiah shall stand for ever: compare Luke i. 33. Bp. Newton.

16. I came near unto one of them that stood by,] To one of the angels, who always attended upon the throne of God and Christ, ver. 9, 10. Several angels are represented as being present at Daniel's visions: see chap. viii 13, 16; x. 5, 6, 16; xii. 5, 6. W. Lowth.

19. Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast, &c.] See the note on ver. 7.

20. And of the ten horns &c.] See the last note on ver. 7.

—— and of the other which came up, and before whom three fell;] See the notes on ver. 8.

—— even of that horn that had eyes,] Of the little horn, which represents the papal power, it was before said, "in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man," ver. 8: namely, to denote his cunning and foresight, his looking out and watching all opportunities to promote his own interest. And the policy of the Roman hierarchy hath almost passed into a proverb. Bp. Newton.

—— and a mouth that spake very great things,] Such had the Pope, especially in former ages, boasting of his supremacy, thundering out his bulls and anathemas, excommunicating princes, and absolving subjects from their allegiance. Bp. Newton.

—— whose look was more stout than his fellows.] The Pope has assumed an unlimited superiority, not only over his fellow bishops, but even over crowned heads. Bp. Newton.

21. — the same horn made war with the saints, &c.] And below, he "shall wear out the saints of the Most High," ver. 25: that is, by wars, and massacres, and inquisitions, persecuting and destroying the faithful servants of Jesus and the true worshippers of God, who protest against his innovations, and refuse to comply with the idolatry practised in the Church of Rome. Bp. Newton.

Before CHRIST about 555.

22 Until the ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom.

23 Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces.

24 And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings.

25 And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time.

26 But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end.

27 And the [d] kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all ‖ dominions shall serve and obey him.

CHAP. VIII.

1 Daniel's vision of the ram and he goat. 13 The two thousand three hundred days of sacrifice. 15 Gabriel comforteth Daniel, and interpreteth the vision.

IN the third year of the reign of king Belshazzar a vision appeared unto me, even unto me Daniel, after that which appeared unto me at the first.

about 553.

2 And I saw in a vision; and it came to pass, when I saw, that I was at Shushan in the palace, which is in the province of Elam; and I saw in a vision, and I was by the river of Ulai.

22. Until the Ancient of days came, &c.] Until the final judgment, when the saints shall sit as assessors with God, shall be seated on thrones, and reign as kings and priests with God and Christ, and possess the kingdom for ever, Rev. xx. 4, 6. Wintle.

24. — and another shall rise after them;] Rather, "behind them:" the meaning appears to be, that the ten horns were not aware of the growing up of "the little horn," till it overtopped them. Jos. Mede.

—— he shall be diverse from the first,] The papal power being an ecclesiastical and spiritual, as well as a civil and temporal authority. Bp. Newton.

—— he shall subdue three kings.] See note on ver. 8, "before whom there were three" &c.

25. And he shall speak great words against the most High,] See ver. 8, 20; chap. xi. 36. St. John plainly alludes to this text, Rev. xiii. 5, 6, where the beast is said to "open his mouth in blasphemy against God." This he did by advancing his own authority above that of God, and in derogation to His laws; compare 2 Thess. ii. 4; as also by setting up the worship of images, and other idolatrous practices, which the Prophet Isaiah calls reproaching and blaspheming God, Isai. lxv. 7. W. Lowth.

Or, as Symmachus interprets it, "he shall speak great words as the Most High:" setting up himself above all laws divine and human, arrogating to himself godlike attributes and titles of holiness and infallibility; exacting obedience to his ordinances and decrees in preference to, and open violation of, reason and Scripture; insulting men, and blaspheming God. Bp. Newton.

—— and shall wear out the saints of the most High,] See above, note on ver. 21.

—— and think to change times and laws:] Appointing fasts and feasts, canonizing saints, granting pardons and indulgences for sins, instituting new modes of worship, imposing new articles of faith, enjoining new rules of practice, and reversing at pleasure the laws both of God and men. Bp. Newton.

—— and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time.] "They," that is, either the saints shall be subject to his power, or his influence shall prevail over the times, or solemnities, and laws. Possibly both might be meant to be included in the usurpation. Wintle.

The period here mentioned must be computed according to the nature and genius of the prophetick language. According to this "time and times and the dividing of time," or half a time, are three years and a half: and the ancient Jewish year consisting of twelve months, and each month of thirty days, "a time and times and half a time," or three years and a half, are reckoned in the Revelation as equivalent to "forty and two months," or "a thousand two hundred and threescore days," chap. xi. 2, 3; xii. 6, 14: and a day in the style of the Prophets is a year, Ezek. iv. 6: and it is confessed, that the seventy weeks in the ninth chapter of Daniel are weeks of years; and consequently 1260 days are 1260 years. So long the little horn, or the papal power, will continue: but from what point of time the commencement of these 1260 years is to be dated, is not so easy to determine. And, as Ireneus saith in a like case, it is surer and safer to wait for the completion of the prophecy, than to conjecture and divine about it. When the end shall come, then shall we know better whence to date the beginning. Bp. Newton.

26. But the judgment shall sit, &c.] This being the last of the four earthly kingdoms or monarchies, when that is destroyed, there will be an end of the present state of things, when all human "rule, authority, and power," shall cease, 1 Cor. xv. 24; and "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ," Rev. xi. 15. W. Lowth.

After what manner these great changes will be effected, we cannot pretend to say, since God hath not been pleased to reveal it. We see the remains of the "ten horns," which arose out of the Roman empire. We see the "little horn" still subsisting, though not in its full strength and vigour, but as we hope upon the decline, and tending towards a dissolution. And having seen so many of these particulars accomplished, we can have no reason to doubt that the rest also will be fulfilled in due season, though we cannot frame any conception, how Christ will be manifested in glory, how the little horn with the body of the fourth beast will be given to the burning flame, or how the saints will take the kingdom, and possess it for ever and ever. It is the nature of such prophecies not to be perfectly understood till they are fulfilled. The best comment upon them will be their completion. Bp. Newton.

Chap. VIII. Hitherto the prophecies of Daniel, that is, from the fourth verse of the second chapter to this chapter, are written in Chaldee. As they greatly concerned the Chaldeans, so they were published in that language. But the remaining prophecies are written in Hebrew, because they treat altogether of affairs subsequent to the times of the Chaldeans, and relate not at all to them, but principally to the Church and people of God. Bp. Newton.

Ver. 2.— Shushan — Elam; — Ulai.] Elam, in its larger sense,

Before CHRIST about 553.

3 Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and, behold, there stood before the river a ram which had two horns: and the two horns were high; but one was higher than † the other, and the higher came up last.

† Heb. the second.

4 I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and became great.

5 And as I was considering, behold, an he goat came from the west on the face of the whole earth, and ‖ touched not the ground: and the goat had † a notable horn between his eyes.

‖ Or, none touched him in the earth.

6 And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and ran unto him in the fury of his power.

Before CHRIST about 553.

7 And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns: and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him: and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand.

8 Therefore the he goat waxed very great: and when he was strong, the great horn was broken; and for it came up four notable ones [a] toward the four winds of heaven.

probably comprehended the whole country on each side of the river Ulai, or Eulæus, the one part being called Elymais, the other Susiana. Shushan, the metropolis, according to Pliny, was placed on this river, or rather surrounded by it, and seems to have been the capital of both parts. Wintle. See the note on Nehem. i. 1.

The Ulai is the same as the Choaspes, according to Rennell's Geography of Herodotus. Dr. Hales.

3. — there stood before the river a ram] The second empire in the former vision is the first in this: and what was there compared to a bear is here prefigured by a ram. This "ram having two horns," according to the explication of the angel Gabriel, was the empire of the Medes and Persians, ver. 20; Cyrus, the founder of this empire, was son of Cambyses, king of Persia, and by his mother Mandane was grandson of Astyages king of Media: and afterwards marrying the daughter an only child of his uncle Cyaxares king of Media, he succeeded to both crowns, and united the kingdoms of Media and Persia. The propriety of the emblem appears from hence, that it was usual for the king of Persia to wear, instead of a diadem, a ram's head made of gold, and adorned with precious stones. Bp. Newton. Rams' heads with horns, one higher and the other lower, are still to be seen on the pillars of Persepolis. Sir J. Chardin.

—— the two horns were high; &c.] This is said, because the empire of the Medes and Persians was a coalition of two very formidable powers: "but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last." The kingdom of Media was the more ancient of the two, and more famous in history: Persia was of little note or account till the time of Cyrus, but under Cyrus the Persians gained and maintained the ascendant. Bp. Newton.

4. I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward;] Daniel saw "the ram standing," or established in his strength, after the succession of the Persian power under Cyrus; and then butting "westward, and northward, and southward," or subduing Lydia, Babylonia, and Egypt, with their dependencies, represented in the former vision by three ribs in the bear's mouth. Dr. Hales.

—— he did according to his will, and became great.] None of the neighbouring kingdoms being able to withstand its power, the Persian empire was increased and enlarged to such a degree, that it extended "from India even unto Ethiopia, over an hundred and seven and twenty provinces," Esth. i. 1: so that seven provinces were added to the hundred and twenty which it contained in the time of Cyrus, Dan. vi. 1. Bp. Newton.

5. — behold, an he goat] The interpretation of which is given in ver. 21. "A goat" is very properly made the type of the Grecian or Macedonian empire. The first king of the Macedonians, about 200 years before Daniel, instigated by an oracle, as it is said, made a goat his ensign, and called his capital city Ægeæ, or the goat's town. Jos. Mede. It is also remarkable, that Alexander's son by Roxana was named the son of the goat; and some of his successors are represented on their coins with goat's horns. Bp. Newton.

—— came from the west &c.] He came "from the west;" for Europe lies westward of Asia: he came "on the face of the whole earth," carrying every thing before him in all the three parts of the world then known: "and he touched not the ground;" alluding to the swiftness of his marches, and the rapidity of his conquests. For the same reason the same empire in the former vision was likened to a "leopard," which is a swift nimble animal; and, to denote the greater quickness and impetuosity, to "a leopard with four wings." Bp. Newton.

—— and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes.] "The rough goat" (see the 21st verse) "is the king of Grecia," that is, the kingdom; "and the great horn between his eyes is the first king:" not the first monarch, but the first kingdom, that which lasted during the reign of Alexander the Great, and his brother Aridæus, and two young sons, Alexander and Hercules. Sir Isaac Newton.

6, 7. And he came to the ram &c.] In these two verses we have an account of the Grecians overthrowing the Persian empire. The ram had before "pushed westward;" and the Persians, in the reign of Darius Hystaspes and Xerxes, had poured down with great armies into Greece; but now the Grecians in return carried their arms into Asia, and the he goat invaded the ram that had invaded him. Bp. Newton.

—— standing before the river, &c.] The first and principal engagement in which Alexander overthrew the Persians was at the river Granicus in Phrygia. The succeeding part of this description is a striking representation of his conquering the Persian monarch in repeated battles, subduing his whole kingdom, taking all his forts and strong cities, making the king himself, with his family, principal officers, &c. prisoners, and thus utterly overturning the Persian empire. Bp. Newton.

8. Therefore the he goat waxed very great: and when he was strong, &c.] This verse is interpreted by the angel in ver. 22. Nothing is fixed and stable in human affairs; and the empire of the goat, though exceeding great, was perhaps for that very reason the sooner broken in pieces. It was in its full strength, when Alexander died of a fever at Babylon. He was succeeded in the throne by his natural brother Philip Aridæus, and by his own two sons Alexander Ægus and Hercules; but in the space of about fifteen years they were all murdered, and then the first horn or kingdom was entirely broken. The royal family being thus extinct, the governours of provinces, who had usurped the power, assumed the title of kings, and, by the defeat and death of Antigonus in the battle of Ipsus, they were reduced to four, Cassander, Lysimachus, Ptolemy, and Seleucus, who parted Alexander's dominions among them, and divided and settled them into four kingdoms. These four kingdoms are the four notable horns, which came up in the room of the first great horn; and are the same as the four heads of the leopard in the former vision. "Four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power;" they were to be kingdoms of Greeks, not of Alexander's own family, but only of his nation; and neither were they to be equal to him in power and dominion: an empire united is certainly more powerful than the same empire divided, and the whole is greater than any of the parts. They were likewise to extend "toward the four winds of heaven:" and in the partition of the empire Cassander held Macedon, and Greece, and the western parts; Lysimachus had Thrace, Bithynia, and the northern regions; Ptolemy possessed Egypt, and the southern countries; and Seleucus obtained Syria, and the eastward provinces. Thus were they divided "toward the four winds of heaven." Bp. Newton.

9. And out of one of them came forth a little horn, &c.] This "little horn" has been supposed to mean Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria, who was a great enemy and cruel persecutor of the Jews. And at first sight he does indeed in some features very much resemble the "little horn;" but on a nearer view it appears, that in other parts there is no similitude or correspondence between them. Sir Isaac Newton, with that sagacity which was peculiar to him, and with which he penetrated into Scripture as well as into nature, perceived plainly that the "little horn" could not be drawn for Antiochus Epiphanes, but must be designed for some other subject. Bp. Newton. The description of it throughout is exactly applicable in all its parts to the Roman temporal power; and this application is sanctioned also by the prevailing opinion of the generality of commentators. Dr. Hales. The Romans, who were prefigured by a great "beast" in the former vision, are here represented by the "horn" of the goat: for nothing is more usual, than to describe the same person or thing under different images upon different occasions: and besides, in this vision the Roman empire is not designed at large, but only the Roman empire as the horn of the goat. When the Romans first got footing in Greece, then they became a horn of the goat. Out of this horn they came, and at first were "a little horn," but in process of time overtopped the other horns. From Greece they extended their arms, and overran the other parts of the goat's dominions: and their actions within the dominions of the goat, and not their affairs in the western empire, are the principal subject of this prophecy. But their actions, which are most largely and particularly specified, are their great persecution and oppression of the people of God; which renders it probable, that the appellation of the "little horn" might be given them for the same reason, that the great persecutor and oppressor of the saints in the western empire is also called the "little horn." It is the same kind of power, and therefore might be signified by the same name. Bp. Newton.

—— which waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land.] This horn therefore was to rise up in the northwest parts of those nations, which composed the body of the goat; and from thence was to extend his dominion towards Egypt, Syria, and Judea. Sir Isaac Newton.

The actions of the little horn here described accord well with the Romans. He "waxed exceeding great;" and so did the Roman empire, even within the territory of the goat. "Toward the south;" the Romans made Egypt a province of their empire, and kept possession of it for several centuries. "Toward the east;" the Romans grew very powerful in this direction, conquering and making a province of Syria, which was the eastern kingdom of the goat. "And toward the pleasant land;" that is, Judea: see Ps. cvi. 24; Jer. iii. 19; Dan. xi. 16, 41. The Romans effectually conquered and subdued the Jews, first made a province of their country, and then destroyed their city and temple, and dispersed the people, so that after so fatal a fall they have never been able to rise again. Bp. Newton.

10. And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven; &c.] Or, "against the host of heaven." This part of the prophecy relates mostly to the persecution and oppression of the people of God. "The host of heaven" are the people and great men of the Jews. Sir Isaac Newton. Either the Jewish state in general, "the mighty and the holy people," ver. 24; or the priests and Levites in particular, who are called "stars," as being eminent for their station, and illustrious for their knowledge; and "the host of heaven," as they watched and served in the temple, and their service is denominated "a warfare," Numb. viii. 24, 25. Our Saviour makes use of the like expressions in speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, Matt. xxiv. 29. Bp. Newton.

In this elevated language is the Jewish hierarchy shadowed out, after the manner of the Eastern writers. The Jewish polity, both civil and religious, was the work of Heaven. The government, laws, and worship, of the holy people, were figured by the sun, moon, and stars. See Matt. xxiv. 29; Mark xiii. 24. Thus the fall of Babylon is foretold in Isai. xiii. 10; and the destruction of Egypt in Ezek. xxxii. 7, 8; and that of Idumea in Isai. xxxiv. 4, 5. Dr. Zouch.

11. Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host,] Or, "against the prince of the host." Bp. Newton. The Messiah, the Prince of the Jews, whom he put to death. Sir Isaac Newton. See the note on ver. 25.

—— and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down.] The Romans took away the daily sacrifice of the Jews, and utterly destroyed their temple. Bp. Newton.

In the 7th verse the he goat is said to "cast down the ram to the ground, and to stamp upon him:" by which is implied the total destruction of the ram. And here the expressions of "casting down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamping upon them;" of "taking away the daily sacrifice, and casting down the place of the sanctuary;" seem to prefigure the most grievous miseries, the utter demolition and extirpation of the Jewish state, the dreadful devastation made by the Romans under Titus Vespasian, when "the stars fell from heaven, and the powers of the heavens were shaken." Dr. Zouch.

12. And an host was given &c.] Or, as we read in the margin, "the host was given over for the transgression against the daily sacrifice, and he cast down the truth to the ground, and he practised, and prospered." Or, as the same thing is expressed by the angel, "He shall destroy wonderfully," &c. see ver. 24, 25. The Romans carried their conquest and their revenge so far, as to put an end to the government of the Jews, and entirely to take away their place and nation. Bp. Newton.

13. —unto that certain saint which spake,] "Unto that excellent one that was speaking." Wintle. This "excellent Saint," who uttered the response, was the Oracle Himself, who before appeared to Isaiah in glory, sitting on His throne between the Seraphim, Isai. vi. 1; and now appeared to Daniel, "as a man, standing before him," and bidding the other angel, whom He called Gabriel, to explain the vision to the Prophet. Dr. Hales.

margin "the Numberer of secrets," or "the wonderful Numberer;" and must mean a Person of extraordinary rank, as being able to unfold those secrets, which were hid from the angels; and is therefore justly supposed to be the Son of God, called "Wonderful, Counseller," Isai. ix. 6, as being acquainted with all God's purposes and designs; compare John i. 18. W. Lowth.

—— How long shall be the vision &c.] Moses had predicted, that the desolation to follow the Roman captivity would be of very long continuance, Deut. xxviii. 59. And Isaiah had enquired from the Oracle, in vision, How long it should continue? Isai. vi. 11; to which no definite answer was then given. That was reserved for the highly favoured Daniel, in this remarkable episode, introduced into the midst of the second vision, and intimately connected therewith; immediately following the account of the destruction of the temple by the Romans. Dr. Hales.

—— the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, &c.] In the original there is no such word as "concerning:" and Mr. Lowth rightly observes, that the words may be rendered more agreeably to the Hebrew thus, "For how long a time shall the vision last, the daily sacrifice be taken away, and the transgression of desolation continue?" &c. Thus it is rendered in several translations. The answer is, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." In the original it is "unto two thousand and three hundred evenings and mornings," an evening and morning being in Hebrew the notation of time for a day; and in allusion to this expression it is said afterwards, "The vision of the evening and the morning is true."

The days without doubt are to be taken agreeably to the style of Daniel in other places, not for natural, but prophetick days; that is, years; and as the question was asked, not only how long the daily sacrifice should be taken away, and the transgression of desolation continue, but also how long the vision shall last; so the answer is to be understood; and these two thousand and three hundred days denote the whole time from the beginning of the vision to the cleansing of the sanctuary. The sanctuary is not yet cleansed, and consequently these years are not yet expired. When these years shall be expired, then their end will clearly shew from whence the beginning is to be dated, whether from the vision of the ram, or of the he goat, or of the little horn. It is difficult to fix the precise time, when the prophetick dates begin, and when they end, till the prophecies are fulfilled, and the event declares the certainty of them. Bp. Newton.

16. And I heard a man's voice — which called, and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision.] And I heard the voice of Him, who was the Word of His Father, speaking in the tone of a man, betwixt the banks of Ulai; which called and said, Gabriel, it is the pleasure of Him, who is the God of spirits, that thou make this man to understand the vision. Bp. Hall.

The Person who utters this voice seems to be the same who is called "the wonderful Numberer," ver. 13; because He speaks as one that had authority over the angel Gabriel. W. Lowth.

Daniel was so overpowered by the Divine presence, that he fell on his face in a deep sleep or trance towards the earth, till Gabriel touched him, and restored him to his senses, and set him upright, and then explained to him more particularly the former historical part of the vision: concluding with a reference to the latter chronological part, or "vision of the evening-mornings," that it was "true," or would be verified by the accomplishment; but that the accomplishment was remote, or "for many days," and that "the vision was shut up," or sealed, and its further disclosure hidden for the present. Dr. Hales.

17. — O son of man:] This title is given to none of the Prophets but Ezekiel and Daniel. Probably it is here given to the Prophet, either to put him in mind that he was but flesh and blood, that he might not be exalted for having these heavenly visions imparted to him; or else it may be interpreted for a mark or title of honour, implying something more than an ordinary man, even such an one as was highly favoured and beloved of God. W. Lowth. See the note on Ezek. ii. 1.

—— for at the time of the end shall be the vision.] Or, "to the time of the end;" that is, there is a precise time appointed for the accomplishment of the vision, when it shall certainly be fulfilled. See ver. 19; and compare chap. ix. 27; xi. 35, 36; Hab. ii. 3. W. Lowth.

19. — in the last end of the indignation:] Or, "to the last end of the indignation." I will explain to thee the whole series of God's judgments upon His people to the end and conclusion of them. See chap. xii. 8. W. Lowth.

23. And in the latter time of their kingdom, &c.] That is, of Alexander's successors. Dr. Hales. The Romans might well be said to stand up "in the latter time of their kingdom," for they saw the end, not only of one kingdom, but of all the four, which were successively subdued, or otherwise gotten possession of, by the Romans. Bp. Newton.

—— when the transgressors are come to the full,] Alluding to the various invasions of the Jewish polity and religion which took place under the Romans; when, among other profanations, under the Roman consul Paulus Æmilius, the Jewish religion was put down, and the heathen worship was set up in the cities of Judea, and in Jerusalem; and the temple itself was consecrated to Jupiter Olympius, and his image was erected upon the very altar. Then indeed "the transgressors were come to the full;" and then, as we see, the Romans "stood up a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences." Bp. Newton.

—— a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences,] "A king" in the prophetick style is the same as "a kingdom;" and a kingdom is any state or government. Bp. Newton.

What follows is a description of the Roman power and policy, in subduing the world by force and fraud. That peculiar characteristick of the Romans, "the fierce countenance," first noticed by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 50, is here repeated, so as to leave no doubt of its application. Dr. Hales. The classical reader will doubtless recollect numberless instances of that peculiar trait in the person of a Roman citizen, which the Prophets Moses and Daniel have conveyed by the term of "a fierce countenance." Dr. Zouch.

The latter phrase is translated in the Syriack, "skilful in ruling;" and in the Arabick, "skilful of disputations." It may mean, that this would be a politick and artful, as well as a formidable, power. Bp. Newton.

The policy, with which the Romans conducted their designs, is thought to be meant in this passage, in allusion to their adroitness and penetration in discovering the designs of their enemies, their knowledge of the parties and interests that prevailed in the courts and councils of different princes; in short, their consummate skill in the intricacies of political intrigue. The contrivances of artful and subtle statesmen may very justly be called "dark sentences." In the art of unravelling their covert and secret machinations, consisted that singular address, which distinguished the character of the Roman people. Their arms were victorious: but their victories were ensured only by the artifice and prudence with which they conducted themselves on every occasion. Dr. Zouch.

24. And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power:] The strength of the other kingdoms consisted in themselves, and had its foundation in some part of the goat; but the Roman empire, as a horn or kingdom of the goat, was not mighty by its own power, was not strong by virtue of the goat; but drew its nourishment and strength from Rome and Italy. There grew the trunk and body of the tree, though the branches extended over Greece, Asia, Syria, and Egypt. Bp. Newton. Or, it may mean, that the singular progress of the Roman greatness was to be attributed, not so much to their own strength, as to the assistance of their allies, and not seldom to the feuds and divisions of their enemies, of which they were always on the watch to take advantage. Dr. Hales. It was the consummate policy of the Romans to use the resources and strength of every conquered nation in still further conquest; and thus to make the world, as it were, the great instrument of its own subjection. Dr. Zouch.

—— and he shall destroy wonderfully, &c.] See the note on ver. 12. The Romans "destroyed wonderfully" both by their arms and their arts: and, even in times of "peace," by their cruel and bloody combats of gladiators and captives. Dr. Hales.

Rome was the seat of perpetual wars. Mithridates, when he saw the Romans eager to watch every opportunity of embroiling themselves in war, said of them, "These conquerors of mankind seem to be really descendants of a wolf; such is their rapacity, such their insatiable avidity." In wars with foreign nations they were not sparing of the blood of their enemies. Their cruelty excites our indignation. The effusion of blood in their civil commotions, the dreadful carnage which followed their odious proscriptions, the savage massacres of their best and most virtuous citizens, can only tend to inspire sentiments of horrour and aversion. And, as to their humanity in the administration of justice, many of their laws may be said, like those of Draco, to have been written in blood. Dr. Zouch.

—— and shall prosper,] What nation was ever so successful as the Romans? Even their temporary disappointments and defeats gave fresh vigour to them. They continually renewed their strength, after the most violent and rude attacks; and, though for a short time deep sunk in calamity and distress, they fainted not, but with redoubled efforts exerted their wonted prowess. They seem to have been thoroughly sensible of their own good fortune, as appears from the inscriptions on their coins, indicating in various phrases their sense of the prosperity of their empire. It may be added, that this good fortune peculiarly attended them in their Eastern conquests. Dr. Zouch.

—— and practise,] That is, shall perform great actions. The great and splendid actions of the Romans have commanded the admiration of all ages. To this subject the panegyrist finds himself unequal. So long as the volumes of history are read, the achievements of this wonderful people will be viewed with astonishment and applause. Dr. Zouch.

—— and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people.] And thus fully accomplish the direful imprecation of the Jews, when they urged Pontius Pilate to hasten the death of Jesus Christ; "His blood be on us and on our children." Dr. Zouch. Concerning the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, see the notes on Deut. xxviii; Matt. xxiv.

25. And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand;] The original word, rendered "craft," is always taken in a bad sense, and implies every kind of fraud, injustice, and deception. This strong lineament is exemplified by the insincerity, artifice, and injustice of the Roman patricians in their conduct towards the plebeians: but it peculiarly belongs to the character of the Romans, if we consider those scenes of fraud and injustice, which were exhibited by them towards the conquered nations, when reduced to the form of a province. Dr. Zouch.

—— and he shall magnify himself in his heart,] See 1 Mac. viii. 13. This expression is strictly applicable to the insolent conduct of Rome after a successful and destructive war. The epithets, so liberally bestowed on the city of Rome, upon ancient coins and medals, imply much vanity and presumption. Proud and arrogant titles were conferred upon the Roman emperours. Indeed their poets, their orators, and their historians, seldom omit an opportunity of exulting in the boasted universal empire of the city. The citizens held themselves equal to kings and princes. They confounded their dominion with the extent of the globe of the earth. Cicero speaks of Rome in all the language of panegyrick: and by one of her own historians, Rome is pronounced to be the city destined for the habitation of men and gods. Dr. Zouch.

—— and by peace shall destroy many:] Or rather, "in peace shall destroy many." Even in times of tranquillity and peace, he shall delight in scenes of cruelty and slaughter. As the character of a people may be deduced from their diversions, when we consider the entertainments to which the Romans were principally addicted, we must, I fear, pronounce them a people estranged from the sentiments of humanity, "in peace destroying many." What can fix them in a more unpleasing point of view, than the shews of their gladiators? Even in the most flourishing and polished periods of their state, they left their theatres, to become spectators of cruel and bloody combats. Nor has a single writer among them intimated his disapprobation of such a conduct, except Seneca, the philosopher. Their other diversions, such as the sight of their fellow creatures torn in pieces by wild beasts, did not discover marks of a more mild and merciful temper. Lipsius has observed, that no war brought such slaughter and devastation on the human race, as these diversions; and that one month has cost Europe twenty or thirty thousand lives. Dr. Zouch.

—— he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes;] It was by the malice of the Jews, but by the authority of the Romans, that the Messiah was put to death, and He suffered the punishment of the Roman malefactors and slaves. Bp. Newton. "He shall stand up against," that is, shall become the judge of, "the Prince of princes." The word, rendered "shall stand up against," is probably used here, as in other passages of Scripture, in a forensick sense; and thus expresses, in vivid colours, the judicial proceedings of the Roman judge against Jesus Christ. For that by "the Prince of princes" is here meant Jesus Christ, will admit, I think, of little doubt. This splendid title is properly applied to Him, who is called the "Prince of the kings of the earth," Rev. i. 5; "Lord of lords, and King of kings," Rev. xvii. 14; "The Prince of Peace," Isai. ix. 6; whose "dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away," Dan. vii. 14; "to whom all power was given in heaven and in earth," Matt. xxviii. 18; who, like a triumphant conqueror, "led captivity captive," Eph. iv. 8; who is the "Star" that was to come out of Jacob, and the "Sceptre" that was to arise out of Israel, Numb. xxiv. 17; before whom "all kings shall fall down," and whom "all nations shall serve," Ps. lxxii. 11; the "Prince" or "Captain of our salvation," Heb. ii. 10. Or, "to stand up against the Prince of princes" may be interpreted, to oppose His authority, by persecuting His faithful servants, and depreciating their merit; and thus to wage war against Him and His religion. The page of history is stained with deeds of exquisite cruelty and inhuman barbarity, exercised by the Romans against the first professors of Christianity: and while the supreme magistrate of Rome indulged himself in the various modes of torture, the zeal of the historian was equally exerted in debasing the characters of innocent men, and branding their religion with odious appellations. Dr. Zouch.

—— but he shall be broken without hand.] As "the stone," in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, was "cut out of the mountain without hands," that is, not by human, but by supernatural means, so "the little horn shall be broken without hand;" not die the common death, nor fall by the hand of men, but perish by a stroke from Heaven. And this agrees perfectly with other predictions of the fatal catastrophe of Rome. See chap. ii. 34; vii. 11, 26. All which implies, that the dominion of the Romans shall be finally destroyed with some extraordinary manifestation of the Divine power. Bp. Newton.

To a reader, conversant in the history of Rome, the character of the Romans will appear to be most accurately defined in this justly-celebrated prophecy; as being, 1. A people of fierce countenance, of great personal courage: 2. Noted also for their policy and wisdom: 3. Rising to dominion and power, not so much by their own strength, as by the assistance of their confederates, and not seldom by the feuds and divisions of their enemies: 4. Engaged in almost perpetual wars, and making dreadful havock and slaughter on the earth: 5. Generally successful in their designs: 6. Performing great and illustrious actions: and, 7. Appointed by Providence as an instrument for the punishment of the Jews, the holy people of God. 8. Corruption soon prevailed among the Romans; fraud and extortion prospered in their provinces. 9. This people assumed high and lofty titles, treating their conquered enemies with great insolence and pride, and considering themselves as sovereigns of the universe. 10. In times of peace feasting their eyes with cruel and bloody spectacles. 11. And to complete the whole, we see a Roman magistrate judging the Messiah, and passing the sentence of death upon "the Prince of princes." It must be allowed that the annals of Rome are adorned with noble examples of genuine and disinterested virtue. Yet whatever encomium is due to the great and splendid qualities of several illustrious individuals, displayed both in publick and in private life, perhaps the national character of the Romans cannot be more clearly delineated than in the portrait, which is here presented to us. Dr. Zouch.

26. —wherefore shut thou up the vision;] The same thing is expressed by "shutting up the words," and "sealing the book," chap. xii. 4. The expression in both places denotes the concealing of the sense of it from common understandings; or the deferring of the accomplishment of the events therein foretold. So we find "shutting" and "opening," "sealing" and "unfolding," are opposed in the prophetical language, and import the same as concealing and revealing; delaying the accomplishment of a prophecy, and bringing it into effect. See Isai. xxix. 11; Rev. v. 1—5; xxii. 10. The words instruct us, that prophecies are never fully understood till they are accomplished; and the nearer the time approaches of their accomplishment, the more light shall diligent searchers have for explaining them. See chap. xii. 4. W. Lowth.

27. And I Daniel fainted, and was sick certain days;] So much was he affected with the misfortunes and afflictions, which were to befall the Church and people of God. This concern of Daniel, and affection for his religion and country, shew him in a very amiable light, and give an additional lustre and glory to his character. Bp. Newton.

Chap. IX. This chapter contains a very affecting and fervent prayer of Daniel, on a near view of the expiration of the seventy years allotted for Judah's captivity; the success of his prayer is pointed out at the conclusion of it, and the deliverance of his brethren is communicated to the Prophet in a very extraordinary revelation by the angel Gabriel; but the misconduct and ingratitude of the Jews would occasion the utter destruction of their restored city, after a period, and by reason of an event, which the prophecy plainly indicates. Wintle.

—— to seek by prayer and supplications,] The promises of God are generally conditional: and the promise of restoring the Jews after seventy years' captivity, had this condition particularly expressed, that they should "call upon Him and pray unto Him," and then He would "hearken unto them," Jer. xxix. 12. W. Lowth.

4. And I prayed unto the Lord my God, and made my confession,] Both acknowledging His justice and holiness, and my own and my people's iniquity. The better men are, the greater is the sense of their guilt, and the deeper is their humiliation: see Job xlii. 6; 1 Tim. i. 15. W. Lowth.

Daniel here sets himself to confess his sins, and those of his countrymen, and to entreat for mercy on Jerusalem, with a fervour and affection never to be exceeded. Our devotions, according to this model, should consist of confession of sins; deprecation of the punishments and judgments acknowledged to be justly due to them; supplication for pardon, deliverance, and grace; and intercession for the Church, and all included in her, our relations, friends, countrymen, and fellow Christians, and more especially for all the sons and daughters of affliction: the whole to be concluded with thanksgiving; concerning which we may observe, that no situation in this world can exclude the necessity, and take away the ground of it, since we find Daniel "giving thanks," when the city and temple of God were in ashes, and himself a captive in Babylon. Even then he not only "prayed," but also "gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime," chap. vi. 10. Bp. Horne.

12. —— our judges that judged us,] Judges here signify any princes or rulers. Compare Job xii. 17; Ps. ii. 10; cxlviii. 11; Prov. viii. 16. W. Lowth.

15. And now, O Lord our God, that hast brought thy people forth out of the land of Egypt &c.] A form of supplication used in several places of Scripture, whereby devout persons entreat God to continue His favours, by recounting His former mercies towards them: see Exod. xxxii. 11, 13; Neh. ix. 10; Jer. xxxii. 20. W. Lowth.

16. —— according to all thy righteousness, &c.] When we have in our Litany expressed from what things we desire to be delivered, we earnestly entreat our good and gracious Lord to shew this mercy to us, "by the mystery of His holy incarnation," and so on: that is, by the means and for the sake of all that He hath done and suffered for us. The same manner of expression is used, not only in common speech on other occasions, and in the liturgies of the ancient church on this, but in the Scripture itself; where St. Paul beseeches Christians "by the mercies of God," Rom. xii. 1; "by the meekness and gentleness of Christ," 2 Cor. x. 1; "by His coming and their gathering together unto Him," 2 Thess. ii. 1: and Daniel intercedes with God thus, "According to all Thy righteousness, let Thine anger and Thy fury be turned away: defer not for Thine own sake, O my God. *Abp. 17. — for the Lord's sake.] For the sake of the Messiah, known by the title of the "Lord" among the Jews, see Ps. cx. 1; and called "Messiah the Prince," ver. 25 of this chapter. All God's promises are fulfilled in and for the sake of Christ, 2 Cor. i. 20. W. Lowth.

This expression, "for the Lord's sake," seems to point out a personal distinction in the Deity, and to refer to the promised Redeemer, who says of Himself, "I am in the Father, and the Father in Me," John xiv. 11; that Lord, for whose sake alone the petition of the Prophet could be heard and accepted. Many similar passages occur in the Old Testament, shewing a plurality of Divine Persons so clearly, that no one, who has not "the vail upon his heart," can well mistake their meaning. See particularly Zech. ii. 10, 11; see also Ps. cx. 1. Waldo.

19. — defer not, for thine own sake, O my God:] The seventy years of our captivity are nearly expired: defer not then, I beseech Thee, the accomplishment of the promise, which Thou hast made, to restore us to our own country, and the free exercise of our religion. So remarkable a turn of providence will greatly redound to the honour of Thy name. See Ps. lxxix. 9, 10; cii. 15, 16. W. Lowth.

To the same effect with this supplication of Daniel are those petitions in our Litany, where we pray God to "deliver us for His name's sake," and presently after, "for His honour." In both which petitions we implore the aid and protection of Almighty God, not for any merit of our own, but from a deep sense of His boundless mercy and goodness; not merely that we may be delivered, but that His honour and glory may be displayed; that men may know, that "He, whose name alone is Jehovah, is the Most High over all the earth," Ps. lxxxiii. 18. Waldo.

20. — for the holy mountain of my God;] The temple, on the rocky mountain Zion: see ver. 16. Wintle.

21. — the man Gabriel,] The angel Gabriel, appearing in the shape of a man. W. Lowth.

—— about the time of the evening oblation.] There were three hours of prayer; see chap. vi. 10: but the two most solemn seasons of it were at the "time of the morning and evening oblation," that solemn service, which was offered daily in the temple in the name of the whole nation: see chap. viii. 11. This service was performed at the third and ninth hours of the day, answering to our nine in the morning and three in the afternoon. Devout persons, that could not attend the temple service, set apart those hours for their private devotions: see 1 Kings xviii. 36. W. Lowth.

23. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth,] God's command to me, to instruct thee further in what should hereafter befall the city and temple of Jerusalem, in behalf of which thou didst pour forth thy supplications. Here was a remarkable completion of that promise in Isai. lxv. 24, "While they are yet speaking, I will hear." W. Lowth.

—— therefore understand the matter, &c.] Apply thy mind carefully to what is said, for this prophecy contains in it truths of the greatest importance. Our Saviour plainly refers to these words, which are repeated ver. 25, when, explaining the latter part of this prophecy of the final destruction of Jerusalem, He adds, "Whoso readeth, let him understand," Matt. xxiv. 15. W. Lowth.

This prophecy, like all the rest of Daniel's, consists of two parts, an introductory prophecy, and an explanation thereof. Sir Isaac Newton.

24. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people &c.] By "seventy weeks" we are to understand seventy weeks of years, or seventy times seven years; that is, 490 years; each day being accounted for a year, according to the prophetical way of reckoning: see Numb. xiv. 34; Ezek. iv. 6. Daniel, by examining the prophecy of Jeremiah, had discovered, that the seventy years of the captivity were nearly expired: and here the angel reveals to him another line of time, importing that Jerusalem, after its restoration, should continue for a space consisting of seventy times seven years, which being expired, it should be finally destroyed. W. Lowth.

Here, by putting a week for seven years, are reckoned 490 years from the time that the dispersed Jews should be reincorporated into a people and a holy city, until the death and resurrection of Christ; whereby 'transgression should be finished and sin ended, iniquity be expiated, and everlasting righteousness brought in, and this vision be accomplished, and the Prophet' (as in the Hebrew) 'consummated,' that Prophet whom the Jews expected: and whereby 'the Most Holy should be anointed,' He who is therefore in the next verse called "the Anointed;" that is, the Messiah, or the Christ. For by joining the accomplishment of the vision with the expiation of sins, the 490 years are ended with the death of Christ. Now the dispersed Jews became a people and city, when they first returned into a polity or body politick: and this was in the seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, when Ezra returned with a body of Jews from captivity, and revived the Jewish worship; and by the king's commission created magistrates in all the land to judge and govern the people according to the laws of God and of the king, Ezra vii. 26. From this year to the death of Christ was just 490 years. Sir Isaac Newton. See the note on ver. 26. Some chronologers date the seventy weeks from the twentieth of Artaxerxes: but the date here assigned appears preferable.

—— upon thy people and upon thy holy city,] Daniel, in his prayer to God, speaking of the Jews and Jerusalem, had used these expressions, "Thy people," and "Thy holy city," ver. 18, 19, as if their title to God's favour was indefeasible. To correct this mistake, the angel, directing his discourse to Daniel, returns him his own expressions, as if the people of the city were rather his than God's. In the same phrase God speaks to Moses, after the sin of the Israelites in making the golden calf, Exod.

xxxii. 7. At the 26th verse of this prophecy the angel tells Daniel how they ceased to be God's people. W. Lowth.

At the expiration of this time, which God had punctually "determined," or allotted for the people of the Jews, they were to be no longer His peculiar people; nor the once holy city Jerusalem, nor the Mosaical worship, any longer to be owned as His peculiar city or worship: and then "the most Holy should be anointed," the Messiah, or Christ, be manifested, "to finish the transgression," restrain impiety by the Gospel; "and to make an end of sins," by taking away the guilt thereof through His death, instead of the Jewish offerings, which were to cease; and thereby "to make reconciliation" with God the Father; "and to bring in everlasting righteousness," not like that of the Law, but of the Gospel, to endure for ever; and so "to seal up the vision and prophecy," fully to complete and finish all that by former visions and prophecies had been revealed. Collyer.

25. —from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem] Daniel had besought God to "behold their desolations," and the ruins of "the city which was called by His name," ver. 18. In answer to this his supplication, the angel acquaints him, that the city, both the streets and the wall thereof, should be rebuilt. W. Lowth.

Daniel had this prophecy in the same year that Darius the Mede and Cyrus took Babylon, which was the 538th year before Christ. Some time after this a decree must be found for building Jerusalem, that now lay in the ruins wherein Nebuchadnezzar left it. Cyrus's decree two years after was not such an one, for that appears to be only a liberty to return and rebuild the temple, Ezra i. 1, 2. The next decree we read of was in the second year of Darius, which was no more than a reinforcement of Cyrus's former decree, Ezra vi. 5. A few houses were then hastily constructed, to accommodate the builders and the worshippers. But the people were like a rope of sand, without the bands of laws and civil sanctions to knit them into a political body, before the seventh year of Artaxerxes, Ezra vii. 11: there was no face of a city, the walls were broken down, and the gates lay, as they had been burnt with fire by the Chaldees. Bp. Chandler. See the note on ver. 26.

—— unto the Messiah the Prince] That is, until the awful period, when the business of His life should be finished; until His hour was come, when He was to glorify His Father, or when He was to be cut off by a voluntary suffering for the sins of all mankind, and thereby triumph as a Prince over death, and over all His and our enemies. All the circumstances of His life are omitted, or rather comprehended in this final event, when all things that were written of Him were accomplished. Wintle.

—— shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the street shall be built again,] The whole put together make sixty-nine weeks of years, or 483 years. The seven weeks, or forty-nine years, here mentioned, must in all probability be assigned to the building of "the street" and the "wall." W. Lowth.

—— even in troublous times.] The Jews were sorely assaulted by their adversaries, who did all they could to hinder them from rebuilding the city, and fortifying it with a new wall. See Nehem. iv. 7, &c.; vi. 15. "The street" probably is put for "the streets" of the city: the singular for the plural, which is very common. W. Lowth.

26. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off,] That is, after the sixty-two added to the seven foregoing weeks, or after the termination of the 483 years. Wintle. The common interpretation is, that in the seventieth or last week the Messiah should be put to death. W. Lowth.

The commencement of the whole period of seventy weeks, or 490 years, being reckoned from the seventh year of Artaxerxes, falls upon the 457th year before the Christian era. To 457 years before the birth of Christ, add twenty-six years after the birth of Christ, which twenty-six is the number that 483 years, or sixty-nine weeks exceed 457 years, and we are brought to the beginning of John the Baptist's preaching of the advent of the Messiah: adding seven years, or one week, to the former, we come to the thirty-third year of our Lord, which was the year of Jesus Christ's death. In other words, compute 490 years, the whole seventy weeks, from the seventh of Artaxerxes; by subtracting 457 years (the space of time between that year and the beginning of the Christian era) from 490, there remain thirty-three, the year of our Lord's death. Bp. Chandler, Dean Prideaux. It was in consequence of this prophecy of Daniel concerning the seventy weeks, or 490 years, that the coming of the Messiah towards the end of that period was generally expected among the nations of the East. Bp. Hallifax.

—— shall — be cut off,] The Hebrew verb is by the Jewish rabbies interpreted of a death inflicted by the sentence of a judge, which sense they confirm by the use of it in a parallel place, Lev. xvii. 14, to which we may add 1 Sam. xxviii. 9. Our Saviour refers to this text, among others, Luke xxiv. 26, 46. W. Lowth.

The name Messiah was probably taken from this place of the Prophet Daniel. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

—— but not for himself:] "The Just suffering for the unjust," 1 Pet. iii. 18. W. Lowth.

—— and the people of the prince that shall come &c.] The Romans, under the conduct of Vespasian and his son Titus, who were the generals in the war, which caused the destruction of Jerusalem, and were both of them dignified with the title of prince or Cesar. After the Romans had burnt both city and sanctuary, they entirely destroyed them, so that, as Josephus relates, it could scarce be perceived the place had ever been inhabited. W. Lowth.

The Romans shall soon after come and destroy Jerusalem and the temple, and shall sweep away all before them, like some violent inundation of a flood; and from the beginning to the very end of this war, there shall be grievous desolations to this people. Bp. Hall.

27. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause &c.] Most of the interpreters suppose the seventy weeks to be completed at the death of Christ. They accordingly suppose John the Baptist's preaching to have occupied three years and a half, before Christ entered on His prophetical office, and translate the following words, "in the half part of the week," understanding it of the latter half. The Hebrew word properly signifies "the half part," and is to be so understood by our translation, chap. xii. 7. W. Lowth.

—— he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease,] Christ, "by His one oblation of Himself once offered," shall put an end to all the sacrifices and oblations made in the Jewish temple. Compare Heb. x. 5, 6, &c. W. Lowth.

——— and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation,] He shall cause the sinful city Jerusalem to be overrun with the abominable legions of the Roman conquerors to the utter desolation thereof. Bp. Hall.

The Romans, after they had set the temple on fire, placed the idolatrous ensigns of their army over against the eastern gate of the temple, and offered sacrifice to them, as Josephus expressly tells us. The word "abominations" is commonly used for idols: see 1 Kings xi. 5, 7; 2 Kings xxiii. 13. And the "abomination of desolation," set upon the altar by Antiochus, 1 Mac. i. 54, is explained by the idol altar, ver. 59. So the "abominations" here spoken of properly signify the ensigns or standards of the Roman legions: each standard having stamped upon it the image of the tutelar god, to which the legion offered sacrifice. W. Lowth.

——— and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate.] All the judgments, which are determined, shall be fully consummated, and poured out upon this miserable city. Bp. Hall.

The words briefly allude to those terrible calamities, which made an entire destruction of that city and people, and were executed upon them in the most dreadful manner, that any nation ever suffered, and with the most evident tokens of the Divine vengeance. W. Lowth. See the notes on Deut. xxviii.

The events, which preceded and followed the coming and sufferings of the Messiah, having been so punctually fulfilled, afford a double confirmation of His being the very same Person prophesied of, and afterwards crucified; nor can they, with any probability of truth, be applied to any other. So that we may well say, This is the clearest and most express prediction in the whole Bible concerning the time of His coming and death. Wogan. Sir Isaac Newton justly represents this illustrious prophecy as the foundation of the Christian religion. Dr. Hales. And Archbishop Secker has recorded the declaration of a writer upon "the weeks," that "if he had hitherto lived an infidel, the conviction wrought in him by a just consideration of the certain sense and perfect completion of this Divine oracle was so full, that he should think it his duty to do and suffer all that was possible for human nature, supported by Divine grace, rather than forfeit his faith." Wintle.

Chap. X. This last vision, in the third year of Cyrus, not long before the Prophet's death, was ushered in with circumstances of peculiar solemnity; with the presence of Christ Himself and His angel, both appearing in human form. First, the spiritual High Priest, clothed in linen, as on the great day of atonement, appeared in glory to Daniel, and spoke to him: and when he heard the voice of His words, he fell into a trance with his face to the ground. The Prophet alone saw this great vision, for his trembling attendants fled to hide themselves, ver. 1—10. Dr. Hales.

Ver. 1. — he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision.] He had a clear view of the succession of the Persian and Grecian monarchies, and of the series of the kings of Syria and Egypt under the latter of them: although the remaining parts of the vision were obscure, especially with respect to their final event. See chap. xii. 8. W. Lowth.

2. — I Daniel was mourning] The reason seems to have been, the interruptions that were caused in the building of the temple according to the decree of Cyrus two years before; and the disposition of some of his brethren, who chose rather to continue in the land of their captivity, than to go up to Jerusalem to hasten and forward that work. Wintle.

——— three full weeks.] In the Hebrew, as in the margin, "three weeks of days:" probably to distinguish them from the weeks of years prophesied of in the last chapter. W. Lowth.

3. I ate no pleasant bread, &c.] Meaning, that he kept a fast by abstaining from better sorts of food. Wintle.

5. — behold a certain man clothed in linen, &c.] Behold, the Son of God stood before me, in the form of a man clothed in pure white linen, to signify His perfect holiness; and His loins were girt about with a girdle of the finest gold. Bp. Hall.

He appeared in the habit of an high priest; see Exod. xxviii. 4, 39; xxix. 5. The description which St. John gives of Christ as High Priest of the Church, Rev. i. 13, corresponds with this place of Daniel; which proves, that the Person here described can be no other than the "Son of God:" which may be farther confirmed by comparing the Person described here, and chap. xii. 5, 6, with Rev. x. 2, 5, 6: who is there represented as "setting His right foot upon the sea, and His left upon the land," as sovereign Lord of both elements. Compare Matt. xxviii. 18. W. Lowth.

——— Uphaz:] See note on Jer. x. 9.

6. His body also was like the beryl, &c.] His body was of a bright celestial colour; and His face glorious and shining, like the appearance of lightning; His eyes, from which nothing can be hid, were beamy and piercing, like flames of fire; His arms and feet were resplendent, like to polished brass; to signify the pureness and unquestionable perfection of His proceedings; and the voice of His words was mighty and forcible. Bp. Hall.

8. — there remained no strength in me:] See the note on Gen. xv. 12. "My comeliness" is better rendered in the margin "my vigour." W. Lowth.

13 But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days: but, lo, Michael, ‖ one of the chief princes, came to help me; and I remained there with the kings of Persia.

‖ Or, the first.

14 Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days: for yet the vision is for many days.

15 And when he had spoken such words unto me, I set my face toward the ground, and I became dumb.

Before CHRIST about 534.

16 And, behold, one like the similitude of the sons of men touched my lips: then I opened my mouth, and spake, and said unto him that stood before me, O my lord, by the vision my sorrows are turned upon me, and I have retained no strength.

17 For how can ‖ the servant of this my lord talk with this my lord? for as for me, straightway there remained no strength in me, neither is there breath left in me.

‖ Or, this servant of my lord.

18 Then there came again and touched me one like the appearance of a man, and he strengthened me,

19 And said, O man greatly beloved, fear not: peace be unto thee, be strong, yea, be strong. And when he had spoken unto me, I was strengthened, and said, Let my lord speak; for thou hast strengthened me.

20 Then said he, Knowest thou wherefore I come unto thee? and now will I return to fight with the prince of Persia: and when I am gone forth, lo, the prince of Grecia shall come.

12.—from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand,] Previously to the communication of this and of the last vision, we find the Prophet waiting for the reception of the Divine intelligence with deep humiliation, and a suitable preparation of mind. Wintle.

—— I am come for thy words.] To give an answer to thy requests, by the direction of that Divine Person, upon whom I attend, ver. 5. See chap. viii. 16, and the notes there. W. Lowth.

13. But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days:] The Persians, upon the solicitation of the enemies of the Jews, had put a stop to the building of the temple all the time of Daniel's humiliation. W. Lowth. See below, the note on ver. 20.

—— Michael, one of the chief princes,] The context will lead to a discovery of the Personage, who is here named Michael. This Personage is superior to Gabriel, for He comes to help him in the greatest difficulties; and Gabriel, the servant of the Most High God, sent forth, as such spirits are used to be, to minister for the elect people of God, declares that this Michael is the only supporter he has. He is also called "one of the chief princes," or "one of the capital princes," or "one of the princes that are at the head of all:" for this is the full, and not more than the full, import of the Hebrew words. Now the Princes, that are "first" or "at the head of all," are clearly no other, than the Three Persons in the Godhead. Michael therefore is one of them: and which of them there can be no doubt. Gabriel, speaking of Him to Daniel, calls Him "Michael your Prince," ver. 21, and "the great Prince which standeth for the children of thy people," chap. xii. 1; that is, not for the nation of the Jews in particular, but for the children, the spiritual children, of that holy seed, the elect people of God: a description, which applies particularly to the Son of God, and to no one else. And in perfect consistence with this description of Michael in the book of Daniel, is the action assigned to Him in the Apocalypse, in which we find Him fighting with the old serpent, the deceiver of the world, and victorious in the combat. That combat who was to maintain, in that combat who was to be victorious, but "the Seed of the woman?" From all this it is evident, that Michael is a name for our Lord Himself, in His particular character of the Champion of His faithful people, against the violence of the apostate faction, and the wiles of the devil. Bp. Horsley.

—— I remained there with the kings of Persia.] I still continued to oppose any motions, which the chief men among the Persians might make in prejudice of the Jews. The word "king" is equivalent in Hebrew to prince or governour. See chap. vii. 17; Jer. xxv. 20, &c.; 1 Kings xxii. 47. W. Lowth.

17. For how can the servant of this my lord talk with this my lord?] How can thy servant, a poor mortal man, maintain a discourse with a person of thy rank and dignity? The words may be translated thus, "How can the servant of this my lord talk with that my Lord?" that is, with the other Person, that first appeared to me with so majestick a presence, at whose sight I was perfectly confounded, ver. 5—9. W. Lowth.

20.—the prince of Persia:—the prince of Grecia] There is some doubt who are the persons here intended by "the princes of Persia and of Grecia." But since they fight with Michael, to those who are conversant with the prophetick style, and have observed the uniformity of its images, it will seem highly probable, that the angels which fight with Michael in the book of Daniel, are of the same sort with those who fight with Michael under the banners of the devil, in the 12th chapter of Revelation. "There was war in heaven: Michael and His angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels." The vision of the war in heaven, in the Apocalypse, represents the vehement struggles between Christianity and the old idolatry in the first ages of the Gospel. The angels of the two opposite armies represent two opposite parties in the Roman state, at the time the vision more particularly regards. Michael's angels are the party which espoused the side of the Christian religion, the friends of which had for many years been numerous, and became very powerful under Constantine the Great, the first Christian emperour. The dragon's angels are the party which endeavoured to support the old idolatry. And in conformity with this imagery of the Apocalypse, "the princes of Persia," in the book of Daniel, are to be understood, I think, of a party in the Persian state, which opposed the return of the captive Jews, first after the death of Cyrus, and again after the death of Darius Hystaspes. And "the prince of Grecia" is to be understood of a party in the Greek empire, which persecuted the Jewish religion after the death of Alexander the Great, particularly in the Greek kingdom of Syria. Bp. Horsley.

21. — in the scripture of truth:] Or, "in the writing of truth;" that is, what is certain and irrevocable. God's decrees are spoken of as if they were committed to writing, and registered in a book. See Deut. xxxii. 34; Ps. lvi. 8; Isai. lxv. 6; Mal. iii. 16. W. Lowth.

Chap. XI. This and the following chapter contain the substance of Daniel's last vision, or a series of prophetical story from the third year of Cyrus to the end of time. The dominion is soon made to pass from the Persians to the Grecians; the state of the Greek empire is continued through various changes and revolutions, and particularly with respect to Syria and Egypt, till at length it yields to the Romans. Several particulars afterwards follow that must relate to the fate of the Church of Christ; and the last chapter has a peculiar respect unto the "time of the end," to the end of all prophecy, or to the grand consummation of all things. Wintle.

It is the usual method of the Holy Spirit, to make the latter prophecies explanatory of the former; and revelation is "as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day," Prov. iv. 18. The four great empires of the world, which were shown to Nebuchadnezzar in the form of a great image, were again more particularly represented to Daniel in the shape of four great wild beasts. In like manner the memorable events, which were revealed to Daniel in the vision of the ram and the he goat, are here again more clearly and explicitly revealed in this vision by an angel; so that this latter prophecy may not improperly be said to be a comment and explanation of the former. Bp. Newton.

Ver. 1. Also I in the first year of Darius &c.] This verse should have been joined to the last chapter: the angel adds, that as he now joins in defending the cause of the Jewish nation, so, at the time of the overthrow of the Babylonish monarchy, he assisted in advancing Darius to the succession, which was the occasion of restoring the Jewish captivity. W. Lowth.

2. — Behold, there shall stand up &c.] The angel first prophesies of the Persian empire, which was then subsisting. "There shall stand up yet," that is, after Cyrus, the founder of the empire, who was then reigning, "three kings in Persia:" these were Cambyses, Smerdis the Magian, and Darius the son of Hystaspes. "And the fourth shall be far richer than they all." The fourth after Cyrus was Xerxes; of whom Justin truly remarks, that his riches were so abundant, that when rivers were dried up by his army, yet his wealth remained unexhausted. "And by his strength through his riches he shall stir up all," both subjects and allies, "against the realm of Grecia." The expedition of Xerxes into Greece is one of the most memorable events in ancient history. Herodotus affirms, that in raising his army he searched every place of the continent, and computes that the whole number of his armament amounted to more than five millions of men. After him no mention is here made of any other king of Persia. "It is to be noted," saith St. Jerome, "that the Prophet, having enumerated four kings of the Persians after Cyrus, slippeth over nine, and passeth to Alexander; for the prophetick spirit did not care to follow the order of history, but only to touch upon the most famous events." Xerxes was the principal author of the long wars and inveterate hatred between the Grecians and Persians; and, as he was the last king of Persia who invaded Greece, he is the last mentioned. The Grecians then in their turn invaded Asia; and Xerxes' expedition being the most memorable on one side, as Alexander's was on the other, the reigns of these two are not improperly connected together. Bp. Newton.

A farther reason may perhaps be assigned, why these kings of Persia only are mentioned, because they were all that should reign before Artaxerxes Longimanus, by whom the decree was issued, according to the prophecy of the seventy weeks, for rebuilding Jerusalem. Wintle.

3. And a mighty king &c.] That Alexander was "a mighty king" and conqueror; that he not only "ruled with great dominion" over Greece and the whole Persian empire, but likewise added India to his conquests; and that he "did according to his will," no one, not even his friends, daring to contradict and oppose him, or, if they did, like Clitus and Callisthenes, paying for it with their lives; are facts too well known to require any particular proof or illustration. Bp. Newton. See the notes on chap. vii. 6; viii. 5, 6.

4. And when he shall stand up, &c.] When he shall be in the height of his prosperity. W. Lowth. The particulars, foretold in this verse, were in a good measure suggested before, chap. viii. 8; see the note there. Thus was Alexander's kingdom "broken and divided, not to his posterity," but "was plucked up, even for others beside those." Bp. Newton.

5. And the king of the south shall be strong, &c.] Though the kingdom of Alexander was divided into four principal parts, yet only two of them are here mentioned, Egypt and Syria: partly because these two were by far the greatest and most considerable; but more particularly because Judea, lying between them, was sometimes in the possession of the kings of Egypt, and sometimes of the kings of Syria. It is in respect of their situation to Judea, that they are called the kings "of the south" and "of the north." "And the king of the south shall be strong, and one of his princes," (as the passage may be rendered after the Greek version,) that is, of Alexander's princes, "shall be strong above him." The "king of the south" was indeed very "strong;" for Ptolemy annexed Cyprus, Phenicia, Caria, and many islands, cities, and regions to Egypt; and likewise enlarged the bounds of his empire by the acquisition of Cyrene. But still "the king of the north," or Seleucus Nicator, was "strong above him," or stronger than he:

for, having annexed the kingdoms of Macedon and Thrace to the crown of Syria, he became master of three parts out of four of Alexander's dominions, and is represented by historians as "the conqueror of the conquerors," and "the greatest king after Alexander." Bp. Newton.

6. And in the end of years they shall join themselves together; &c.] After many years of hostility between the kings of Egypt and Syria, Ptolemy Philadelphus, the second king of Egypt, and Antiochus Theus, the third king of Syria, agreed to make peace upon condition, that Antiochus should put away his former wife Laodice and her two sons, and should marry Berenice the daughter of Ptolemy. "For the king's daughter of the south shall come to the king of the north to make" rights or agreements: and accordingly, Ptolemy Philadelphus brought his daughter to Antiochus Theus, and with her an immense treasure, so that he received the appellation of the dowry-giver. "But she shall not retain the power of the arm," that is, her interest and power with Antiochus; for after some time, he brought back his former wife Laodice with her children to court again. "Neither shall he stand, nor his arm," or his seed: for Laodice, fearing the fickle temper of her husband, lest he should recall Berenice, caused her husband to be poisoned; and neither did his seed by Berenice succeed him in the kingdom, but Laodice contrived and managed matters so that her eldest son Seleucus Callinicus was fixed on the throne of his ancestors. "But she shall be given up;" for Laodice, not content with poisoning her husband, caused also Berenice to be murdered. "And they that brought her:" for her Egyptian women, in endeavouring to defend her, were many of them slain with her. "And he that begat her," or rather, as it is in the margin, "he whom she had brought forth;" for the son was murdered as well as the mother, by order of Laodice. "And he that strengthened her in these times," her husband Antiochus, as St. Jerome conceives; or those who took her part and defended her; or rather, her father, who died a little before, and was so very fond of her that he took care continually to send her fresh supplies of the water of the Nile, thinking it better for her to drink of that than of any other river, as Polybius relates. Bp. Newton.

7—9. But out of a branch of her roots &c.] Such wickedness was not to pass unpunished and unrevenged. Out of the same "root" with Berenice sprang Ptolemy Euergetes, her brother; who no sooner succeeded his father Ptolemy Philadelphus in the kingdom, than "he came with an army, and entered into the fortress," or fenced cities, "of the king of the north," that is, of Seleucus Callinicus, who with his mother Laodice reigned in Syria: and he "dealt," or acted, "against them, and prevailed" so far, that he took Syria, and Cilicia, and the upper parts beyond Euphrates, and almost all Asia. And when he had heard that a sedition was raised in Egypt, he plundered the kingdom of Seleucus, and took 40,000 talents of "silver," and "precious vessels," and images of their "gods" two thousand and five hundred. "So the king of the south came into the kingdom of the north, and then returned into his own land." He likewise "continued more years than the king of the north;" for Seleucus Callinicus died in exile of a fall from his horse, and Ptolemy Euergetes survived him about four or five years. Bp. Newton.

10. But his sons shall be stirred up, &c.] The sons of the king of the north should endeavour to vindicate and avenge the cause of their father and their country. The sons of Seleucus Callinicus were Seleucus Ceraunus and Antiochus the Great. The former, who succeeded his father on the throne, was indeed "stirred up, and assembled a multitude of great forces," in order to recover his father's dominions, but was poisoned by two of his generals after an inglorious reign of two or three years. Upon his decease his brother Antiochus was proclaimed king. The Prophet's expression is very remarkable, that "his sons should be stirred up, and assemble a multitude of great forces;" but then the number is changed, and only "one should certainly come, and overflow, and pass through." Accordingly Antiochus came with a great army, retook Seleucia, and recovered Syria. Then after a truce, wherein both sides treated of peace, but prepared for war, Antiochus "returned," and overcame in battle Nicolaus the Egyptian general, and had thoughts of invading Egypt itself. Bp. Newton.

—— then shall he return, and be stirred up, even to his fortress.] Or, "he shall again be stirred up," &c. At the spring of the next year he shall take the field again, and encamp at Raphia, a frontier town upon the borders of Egypt. W. Lowth.

11. And the king of the south shall be moved with choler, &c.] Ptolemy Philopator, the king of Egypt, though a luxurious prince, was at length roused by the near approach of danger. And he "came forth:" he marched out of Egypt with a numerous army to oppose the enemy, and encamped not far from Raphia, which is the nearest town to Egypt after Rhinocorura. And there he "fought with him, even with the king of the north;" for thither likewise came Antiochus with his army, and a memorable battle ensued. "And he," the king of the north, "set forth a great multitude," amounting to 62,000 foot, 6000 horse, and 102 elephants. But yet "the multitude was given into his hand," that is, into the hand of the king of the south: for Ptolemy obtained a complete victory; and Antiochus, having lost about 10,000 foot, 300 horse, and 4000 prisoners, was obliged to solicit a peace. Bp. Newton.

12. And when he hath taken away the multitude, &c.] Ptolemy knew not how to make a proper advantage of his victory, but "his heart was lifted up" by success. Being delivered from his fears, he now more freely indulged his lusts; so that, instead of being "strengthened" by his victory, he provoked even his own subjects to rebel against him. But the Prophet in this passage more particularly foretold the case of his own countrymen. After the retreat of Antiochus, Ptolemy visited the cities of Cœle-Syria and Palestine, which had submitted to him; and among others in his progress he came to Jerusalem. He there offered sacrifices, and was desirous of entering into the Holy of Holies, contrary to the custom and religion of the place, being, as the writer of Maccabees says, greatly lifted up by pride and confidence. His curiosity was restrained with great difficulty, and he departed with heavy displeasure against the whole nation of the Jews. At his return therefore to Alexandria, he began a cruel persecution upon the Jewish inhabitants of that city, who had resided there from the time of Alexander, and enjoyed the privileges of the most favoured citizens. "And he cast down many ten thousands;" for it appears from Eusebius, that about this time forty thousand Jews were slain, or sixty thousand, as they are reckoned in St. Jerome's Latin interpretation. No king could be "strengthened" by the loss of such a number of useful subjects. The loss of so many Jews, and the rebellion of the Egyptians, added to the mal-administration of the state, must certainly very much weaken, and almost totally ruin, the kingdom. Bp. Newton.

13. For the king of the north shall return, &c.] After a peace of about fourteen years, in the course of which Ptolemy Philopator had died of intemperance, and was succeeded by his son Ptolemy Epiphanes, a child of four or five years old, Antiochus, having acquired "great riches," and collected many forces in an eastern expedition, which enabled him to "set forth a greater multitude than the former, returned:" not doubting to have an easy victory over an infant king. Bp. Newton.

14. And in those times there shall many stand up &c.] Not only Antiochus rose up against young Ptolemy, but others also confederated against him. The provinces, which were before subject to Egypt, rebelled; and Egypt itself was disturbed by seditions. Philip too, the king of Macedon, entered into a league with Antiochus, to divide Ptolemy's dominions between them. "Also the robbers of thy people:" it is literally "the sons of the breakers," the sons of the revolters, the factious and refractory ones, "of thy people," the Jews, who were at that time much broken into factions. These were to "exalt themselves to establish the vision:" accordingly they revolted from Ptolemy, and thereby contributed greatly, without knowing it, to the accomplishment of this prophecy concerning the calamities, which should be brought upon the Jewish nation by the succeeding kings of Syria. "But they shall fall:" for Scopas came with a powerful army from Ptolemy, and, in the absence of Antiochus, soon reduced the cities of Cœle-Syria and Palestine to their former obedience. Bp. Newton.

15, 16. So the king of the north shall come, &c.] Antiochus, wishing to recover the cities and countries, which Scopas had taken, came again into those parts; and having defeated Scopas, pursued him to Sidon, which he closely besieged, and at length compelled to surrender. This event probably was principally intended by his "casting up a mount, and taking the city of munitions," as in the margin; for Sidon was an exceeding strong city both in situation and fortifications: besides which, he took other "the most fenced cities," as in the text, as recited by the Greek and Roman historians. "The arms of the south could not withstand him, neither his chosen people;" neither Scopas, nor the other great generals, nor the choicest troops that were sent against him: but he "did according to his own will, and none" was able to "stand before him;" for he soon rendered himself master of all Cœle-Syria and Palestine. Among others the Jews also readily submitted to him: and thus he "stood in the glorious land," and his power was established in Judea, "which by his hand was consumed," the Jews suffering many things, and their country being wasted, during these hostilities. Bp. Newton.

17. He shall also set his face to enter with the strength of his whole kingdom,] Antiochus, not contented with having rent the principal provinces from Egypt, was forming schemes to invade the country itself with all his forces: "and upright ones with him," that is, the Jews, who marched under his banners, and are so called to distinguish them from the idolatrous soldiers. And so Antiochus would have seized upon Egypt by force; but, as he was meditating a war with the Romans, he judged it better to proceed by stratagem, and to carry on his designs by treaty, rather than by arms. For this purpose "he shall give him the daughter of women," his daughter so called, as being one of the most eminent and beautiful of women: accordingly Antiochus married his daughter Cleopatra to Ptolemy, and gave in dowry with her the provinces of Cœle-Syria and Palestine, upon condition of the revenues being equally divided between the two kings. All this he transacted with a fraudulent intention to "corrupt her," and induce her to betray her husband's interests to her father. But his design did not take effect; "she shall not stand on his side, neither be for him." Ptolemy and his generals were aware of his artifices, and therefore stood upon their guard: and Cleopatra herself affected more the cause of her husband than of her father; insomuch that she joined with her husband in an embassy to the Romans to congratulate them upon their victories over her father, and to exhort them, after they had expelled him out of Greece, to prosecute the war in Asia, assuring them at the same time, that the king and queen of Egypt would readily obey the commands of the senate. Bp. Newton.

18. After this shall he turn his face unto the isles,] Antiochus, having fitted out a formidable fleet, "turned his face unto the isles" of the Mediterranean, subdued most of the maritime places on the coasts of Asia, Thrace, and Greece, and "took" Samos, Eubœa, and "many" other islands. This was a great indignity and "reproach offered" to the Romans, when their confederates were thus oppressed, and the cities, which they had lately restored to liberty, were enslaved. "But a prince," or rather "a leader, a general," meaning the Roman generals, repelled the injury, and caused his "reproach to cease." After various defeats, Antiochus and his successors became tributary to the Romans; so truly and effectually did they not only "cause the reproach offered by him to cease," but, greatly to their own honour, "caused it to turn upon him." Bp. Newton.

19. Then he shall turn his face toward the fort of his own land:] After the battle, that decided his fortunes, Antiochus fled away to Sardes, and thence into Syria, to Antioch, "the fort of his own land." Then marching into the eastern provinces, to collect there the arrears of tribute, and amass what treasure he could, in an attempt to plunder the rich temple of Jupiter Belus in Elymais, he was assaulted by the inhabitants of the country, and himself and all his attendants slain. Thus by an inglorious death he "stumbled and fell, and was no more found." Bp. Newton.

It is observable, that during the reign of Antiochus the Great, the Romans began to extend their conquests in the East, and they are by his means imperceptibly, as it were, introduced into the narration, of which they make so considerable a part in the sequel. This prince in many instances favoured the Jews, yet during the whole of his wars was generally the occasion of great distresses amongst them; and hence we have so long an account of him, from the tenth verse to the nineteenth. Wintle.

20. Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes in the glory of the kingdom:] Or rather, as in the margin, "one that causeth an exacter to pass over the glory of the kingdom." Seleucus Philopator succeeded his father Antiochus the Great in the throne of Syria; but he performed nothing worthy of the empire of Syria, and of his father. The tribute of a thousand talents, which he was obliged to pay annually to the Romans, was indeed a grievous burden to him and his kingdom; and he was little more than "a raiser of taxes" all his days. He was tempted even to commit sacrilege; for, being informed of the money that was deposited in the temple of Jerusalem, he sent his treasurer Heliodorus to seize it. This was literally "causing an exacter to pass over the glory of the kingdom," when he sent his treasurer to plunder that temple, which "even kings did honour and magnify with their best gifts," and where Seleucus himself, of his own revenues, bore all the costs belonging to the service of the sacrifices. "But within few days," or rather years, according to the prophetick style, he was destroyed; and his reign was of short duration in comparison of his father's; for he reigned only twelve years, and his father thirty-seven. Or perhaps the passage may be better expounded thus; that "within few days," or "years," after his attempting to plunder the temple of Jerusalem, he should "be destroyed;" and not long after that he was "destroyed, neither in anger, nor in battle," as all chronologers agree; neither in rebellion at home, nor war abroad; but by the treachery of his own treasurer Heliodorus. The same wicked hand that was the instrument of his sacrilege, was also the instrument of his death. Bp. Newton.

21. And in his estate shall stand up a vile person,] Antiochus Epiphanes, who succeeded to the kingdom, was at Athens, when his brother Seleucus died by the treachery of Heliodorus: and "the honour of the kingdom was not given to him," for Heliodorus attempted to get possession of it himself; another party declared in favour of Ptolemy Philometor, king of Egypt, whose mother Cleopatra was the daughter of Antiochus the Great, and sister of the late king Seleucus: and neither was Antiochus Epiphanes the right heir to the crown, but his nephew Demetrius, the son of Seleucus, then an hostage at Rome. However he "obtained the kingdom by flatteries." He flattered Eumenes king of Pergamus, and Attalus his brother, and by fair promises engaged their assistance. He flattered the Syrians, and with great show of clemency obtained their concurrence. He flattered the Romans also, and sent ambassadours to court their favour by presents and promises of fidelity. Thus he "came in peaceably:" and as he flattered the Syrians, the Syrians flattered him again, and bestowed on him the title of Epiphanes, or the illustrious: but the epithet of "vile," or rather "despicable," given him by the Prophet, agrees better with his true character. For he disgraced himself by such profligate, low, ridiculous, and indecent conduct, as induced Polybius, who was a contemporary writer, and others after him, instead of Epiphanes, or the illustrious, more rightly to call him Epimanes, or the madman. Bp. Newton.

He is called here "a vile person," not for any want of wit or parts, but for the extravagance of his life and actions. W. Lowth.

22. And with the arms of a flood shall they be overflown from before him,] Heliodorus, the murderer of Seleucus, and his partizans, as well as those of the king of Egypt, who had formed designs upon Syria, were vanquished by the forces of Eumenes and Attalus, and dissipated by the arrival of Antiochus, whose presence disconcerted all their measures. "The prince also of the covenant was broken:" that is, the high priest of the Jews. As soon as Antiochus was seated on the throne, he removed Onias from the high priesthood, and preferred Jason, the brother of Onias, to that dignity: but though he had "made a league" with Jason, the new high priest, he did not adhere to it faithfully, but acted "deceitfully;" and having deposed Jason, substituted Jason's younger brother, Menelaus, in his room. Bp. Newton.

23, 24. — for he shall come up,] Rather, "and he shall come up, and shall become strong with a small people." Antiochus Epiphanes had been many years an hostage at Rome; and coming from thence with only a few attendants, he appeared in Syria little at first, but soon received a great increase, "and became strong with a small people." By the friendship of Eumenes and Attalus he "entered peaceably," ver. 24, upon the upper provinces: as likewise upon the provinces of Cœle-Syria and Palestine. And wherever he came, he outdid his "fathers and his fathers' fathers" in liberality and profusion. He "scattered among them the prey, and spoil, and riches." The "prey" of his enemies, the "spoil" of temples, and the "riches" of his friends, as well as his own revenues, were expended in publick shows, and bestowed in largesses among the people. The writer of the first book of Maccabees affirms, that, in the liberal giving of gifts, "he abounded above the kings that were before him," 1 Mac. iii. 30. After some time, apprehensive of a war with Egypt, he went into Phenicia, to fortify his own "strong holds," and to "forecast his devices against" those of the enemy: thus he did "even for a time," and employed some years in his hostile preparations. Bp. Newton.

25, 26. And he shall stir up his power &c.] The transactions, here foretold, are thus related by the writer of the first book of Maccabees: "Now when the kingdom was established" &c. see chap. i. ver. 16—19. "He shall stir up his power against the king of the south with a great army," says the Prophet: "he entered into Egypt with a great multitude," says the historian. "The king of the south shall not stand," says the Prophet; "Ptolemy was afraid and fled," says the historian. "Many shall fall down slain," says the Prophet; "and many were wounded to death," says the historian. The misfortunes of Ptolemy Philometor are by the Prophet ascribed principally to the treachery and baseness of his own ministers and subjects: "for they shall forecast devices against him; yea, they that feed of the portion of his meat shall destroy him." And it is certain, that Eulæus was a very wicked minister, and bred up the young king in luxury and effeminacy contrary to his natural inclination. Ptolemy Macron too, who was governour of Cyprus, revolted from him, and delivered up that important island to Antiochus; and for the reward of his treason was admitted into the number of the king's principal friends, and was made governour of Cœle-Syria and Palestine. Nay even the Alexandrians, seeing the distress of Philometor, renounced their allegiance; and taking his younger brother Euergetes or Physcon, proclaimed him king instead of the elder brother. Bp. Newton.

27. And both these kings' hearts shall be to do mischief, &c.] Ptolemy Philometor by some means, of which history does not inform us, came into the hands of Antiochus: and after Antiochus was come to Memphis, and the greater part of Egypt had submitted to him, he and Philometor did frequently eat and converse together "at one table;" but, notwithstanding this appearance of peace and friendship, "their hearts" were really bent "to do mischief," and they "spoke lies" the one to the other. For Antiochus pretended to take care of his nephew Philometor's interest, and promised to restore him to the crown, at the same time that he was plotting his ruin, and was contriving means to weaken the two brothers by a war against each other, that the conqueror, wearied and exhausted, might fall an easy prey to him. On the other side, Philometor laid the blame of the war on his governour Eulæus, professing great obligations to his uncle, and seemed to hold the crown by his favour, and at the very same time that he was resolved to take the first opportunity of breaking the league with him, and of being reconciled to his brother: and accordingly, as soon as ever Antiochus was withdrawn, he made proposals of accommodation, and by the mediation of their sister Cleopatra a peace was made between the two brothers, who agreed to reign jointly in Egypt and Alexandria. But still this artifice and dissimulation did not prosper on either side. For neither did Antiochus obtain the kingdom, neither did Philometor utterly exclude him, and prevent his returning with an army, as each intended and expected by the measures which were taken; for these wars were not to have an "end" till the "time appointed," which was not yet come. Bp. Newton.

28. Then shall he return into his land with great riches;] He did indeed "return with great riches;" for the spoils which he took in Egypt were of immense value. Returning thence, he set "his heart against the holy covenant:" for having heard of some disturbances, which had arisen at Jerusalem on a report of his death, and concluding that the whole nation of the Jews had revolted, he marched against Jerusalem; besieged the city, and took it by force of arms; slew 40,000 of the inhabitants, and sold as many more for slaves; polluted the temple and altar with swine's flesh, profaned the Holy of Holies by breaking into it, and took away the golden vessels and other sacred treasures to the value of 1800 talents. When he had "done" these "exploits," he "returned to his own land." Bp. Newton.

29, 30. At the time appointed] Namely, the time hinted at before, ver. 28, "he shall return" &c. Antiochus, perceiving that the two brothers had provided for their mutual safety and interest by making peace, was so offended that he again invaded Egypt. But this expedition was not so successful as his "former" ones; because "the ships of Chittim," which brought the Roman ambassadours from Italy, to command a peace between the contending kings, "came against him." Antiochus was terrified, and withdrew his army. "Therefore he grieved and returned." He led back his forces into Syria: "and had indignation against the holy covenant;" for he vented all his anger upon the Jews, slaying great multitudes, plundering and burning the city, pulling down its walls and houses, shedding the blood of those who came to worship at the temple, defiling the sanctuary, and causing the whole service to be omitted. "So he did;" and after his "return" to Antioch he published a decree, which obliged all persons upon pain of death to conform to the religion of the Greeks: and so the Jewish law was abrogated, the heathen worship was set up in its stead, and the temple itself was consecrated to Jupiter Olympius. In the transacting and ordering of these matters, he "had intelligence with them that forsook the holy covenant," Menelaus and the other apostate Jews of his party, who were the king's chief instigators against their religion and their country. Bp. Newton.

31. And arms shall stand on his part, &c.] The last attack of Antiochus on the city and people of the Jews has been already noticed. Another power was introduced at the thirtieth verse, in the term "ships of Chittim;" and to this the narrative most probably now turns, and will be found applicable to the affairs and consequences of this fourth beast or kingdom to the end of the book, although there are various opinions concerning the application of this part of the prophecy. Wintle, Bp. Newton.

In the same year that Antiochus by command of the Romans retired out of Egypt, and set up the worship of the Greeks in Judea, the Romans conquered the kingdom of Macedon, the fundamental kingdom of the empire of the Greeks, and reduced it into a Roman province; and thereby began to put an end to the reign of Daniel's third beast. This is thus expressed by Daniel. And after him "arms;" that is, Romans "shall stand up." "Arms" are every where in this prophecy put for the military power of a kingdom; and they "stand up," when they conquer and grow powerful. Hitherto Daniel described the actions of the kings of the north and south; but upon the conquest of Macedon by the Romans, he left off describing the actions of the Greeks, and began to describe those of the Romans in Greece. They conquered Macedon, Illyricum, and Epirus, in the year of Nabonassar 580: thirty-five years after, by the last will and testament of Attalus the last king of Pergamus, they inherited that rich and flourishing kingdom; that is, all Asia westward of mount Taurus; sixty-nine years after they conquered the kingdom of Syria, and reduced it into a province, and thirty-four years after they did the like to Egypt. By all these steps the Roman "arms stood up" over the Greeks: and after ninety-five years more, by making war upon the Jews, "they polluted the sanctuary of strength, and took away the daily sacrifice, and then placed the abomination" of desolation. For this abomination was placed after the days of Christ, Matt. xxiv. 15; in the sixteenth year of the emperour Adrian, in the year of our Lord 132, they placed this abomination by building a temple to Jupiter Capitolinus where the temple of God in Jerusalem had stood. Thereupon the Jews under the conduct of Barchochab rose up in arms against the Romans, and in the war had fifty cities demolished, nine-hundred and eighty-five of their best towns destroyed, and eighty thousand men slain by the sword: and in the end of the war, in the year 136, were banished Judea upon pain of death, and thenceforward the land remained desolate of its old inhabitants. Sir Isaac Newton, Bp. Newton.

32, 33. And such as do wickedly against the covenant &c.] The Roman magistrates and officers made use of the most alluring promises, as well as of the most terrible threatenings, to prevail upon the primitive Christians to renounce their religion, and offer incense to the statues of the emperours and images of the gods. Many were induced to comply with the temptation, and apostatized from the faith: but the true Christians, "the people that knew their God were strong," remained firm to their religion, and gave the most illustrious proofs of the most heroick patience and fortitude. It may be said also with the strictest truth and propriety of the primitive Christians, that being dispersed every where, and preaching the Gospel in all the parts of the Roman empire, they "instructed many," and gained a great number of proselytes to their religion: "yet they fell by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days;" for they were exposed to the malice and fury of ten general persecutions, and suffered all manner of injuries, afflictions, and tortures, with little intermission for the space of three hundred years. Bp. Newton.

34, 35. Now when they shall fall, &c.] The Church had now laboured under long and severe persecutions from the civil power. The tenth and last general persecution was begun by Diocletian: it raged, though not at all times equally, ten years; and was suppressed entirely by Constantine, the first Roman emperour, who made open profession of Christianity: and then the Church was no longer persecuted, but was protected and favoured by the civil power. But still this is called only "a little help:" because, though it added much to the temporal prosperity, yet it contributed little to the spiritual graces and virtues, of Christians. It was attended with this peculiar disadvantage, that "many clave to them with flatteries." Many became Christians for the sake of temporal emolument, and pretended to be of the religion, only because it was the religion of the emperour. This is also called "a little help," because the temporal peace and prosperity of the Church lasted but a little while. The spirit of persecution presently revived; and no sooner were the Christians delivered from the fury of their heathen adversaries, than they began to quarrel among themselves, and to persecute one another. Such, more or less, has been the condition of the Church ever since: and, generally speaking, "those of understanding have fallen" a sacrifice to others, some of the best and wisest men to some of the worst and most ignorant. These calamities were to befall the Christians, "to try them, and to purge, and to make them white," not only at that time, but "even to the time of the end, because it is yet for a time appointed." Bp. Newton.

36. And the king shall do according to his will; &c.] The prophecy now proceeds to describe the principal author of the persecutions which should be permitted for the trial of the Church. A "king" or "kingdom," as before noticed, signifies any government, state, or potentate: and the meaning of this verse appears to be, that, after the empire was become Christian, there should spring up in the Church an antichristian power, that should act in the most absolute and arbitrary manner, exalt itself above all laws divine and human, dispense with the most solemn and sacred obligations, and in many respects enjoin what God had forbidden, and forbid what God had commanded. This power began in the Roman emperours, who summoned councils, and directed and influenced their determinations almost as they pleased. After the division of the empire, this power still increased, and was exerted principally by the Greek emperours in the East, and by the bishops of Rome in the West; as we shall see in the several particulars hereafter specified by the Prophet. This power too was to continue in the Church, and "prosper till the indignation be accomplished: for that that is determined shall be done." This must denote some particular period. Bp. Newton.

37. Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, &c.] He shall apostatize in some measure from the religion of his Christian fathers, as he actually did, both in the Greek and Latin Church, by worshipping "Mahuzzim" instead of the true God blessed for ever. "Nor shall he regard the desire of women," or conjugal affection: the meaning is, he shall neglect and discourage marriage, as both the Greeks and Latins did, to the great detriment of human society, and to the great discredit of the Christian religion. Thus did the power here described "magnify himself above all," even God Himself, by contradicting the primary law of nature; and making that dishonourable which the Scripture hath pronounced "honourable in all," Heb. xiii. 4. Bp. Newton.

38. But in his estate shall he honour the god of forces:] Or "Mahuzzim;" that is, properly, "munitions, bulwarks, fortresses;" or, as the word may signify, "protectors, defenders, guardians." Them he should worship as God, or with God: and it is notorious, that the worship of saints and angels was established both in the Greek and Latin Church; and that their shrines and images were adorned with the most costly offerings, and "honoured with gold and silver, and with precious stones, and desirable things." What renders the completion of the prophecy still more remarkable is, that they were celebrated and adored under the title of Mahuzzim, of bulwarks and fortresses, of protectors and guardians, of mankind. Bp. Newton.

39. Thus shall he do in the most strong holds with a strange god, &c.] This verse contains other instances of his regard to Mahuzzim; but for the better understanding of this part of the prophecy, it may be proper to propose a more literal translation of it. "Thus shall he do: to the defenders of Mahuzzim, together with the strange god whom he shall acknowledge, he shall multiply honour; and he shall cause them to rule over many, and the earth he shall divide for a reward." That is, "He shall multiply honour" to the defenders and champions of Mahuzzim, as well as to Mahuzzim themselves: deifying Mahuzzim, he shall also glorify their priests and ministers: "and he shall cause them to rule over many, and the earth he shall divide for a reward." The defenders and champions of Mahuzzim were the popish ecclesiasticks and religious orders: and that they have been honoured and reverenced, and almost adored in former ages, that their authority and jurisdiction have extended over the purses and consciences of men, that they have been enriched with noble buildings and large endowments, and have had the choicest of the lands appropriated for church lands, are points of such publick notoriety, that they require no proof, as they will admit of no denial. Bp. Newton.

40. And at the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him: &c.] The minute and astonishing conformity of the foregoing prophetical description, ver. 31—39, throughout with the events, and its exact harmony with the parallel prophecies of Daniel himself and with corresponding passages in the New Testament, afford a high probability to the correctness of the interpretation, which Bp. Newton has supported with great learning and ability, and at considerable length, in his Dissertations on the Prophecies. The last part of this vision, ver. 40—45, appears to be unfulfilled. It is therefore "sealed" or "shut up" at present, till further light shall be furnished by the events. Dr. Hales.

Chap. XII. ver. 1. And at that time shall Michael stand up,] To defend the cause of the true people of God, and to destroy the enemies of the true religion. Wintle.

—— and there shall be a time of trouble,] When the Jews shall be restored, there shall be such calamities as no nation hath ever before experienced, since men were formed into civil societies. Tribulations are often mentioned in Scripture, as preceding extraordinary events; see Ezek. xxx. 2, 3: and especially, as ushering in the kingdom of God, whether that kingdom relate to the first or second advent of the Messiah. See Isai. viii. 22; Jer. xxx. 7; Matt. xxiv. 21: at which last place an expression is used of like import with this of Daniel. This unusual and extraordinary time of trouble is supposed to correspond with that represented by St. John, to follow upon the pouring out of the seventh vial, Rev. xvi. 18: yet the people of God shall escape. Wintle.

—— every one that shall be found written in the book.] Whosoever shall be registered or arranged in the class of the pious or faithful. At Ezek. ix. 4, the pious are said to be marked with the "thau" in their foreheads, like the capital "chi" of the Greeks; see Phil. iv. 3; Rev. iii. 5; xx. 15; where the book is called the "book of life." "Rejoice," says our Lord to His disciples, Luke x. 20, "because your names are written in heaven;" because ye are enlisted under the banners of the Gospel, called the kingdom of heaven, and are thereby entitled to its present graces, and if ye persevere with faith and constancy will be rewarded with its future glories. Wintle.

2. And many of them that sleep &c.] The prophecy, as we have seen, was brought down to the restoration of the Jews, and thereupon proceeds to the general restoration, or resurrection of all men, and the final judgment. The Jews themselves believed this doctrine, and had hopes therein founded on the promises of God to their fathers, Acts xxvi. 6; and there is no passage in the Old Testament that more strongly declares this truth than that before us. Wintle.

These expressions can with truth and propriety be applied only to the general resurrection of the just and unjust: and, though it may be said "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," yet that is no objection to the truth here delivered; for as Theodoret observed long ago, the Prophet had said "many" for "all," as St. Paul does in Rom. v. 15, 19. The proper conclusion of all is the general resurrection, and the consequent happiness of the wise and good: ver. 3, "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." Bp. Newton.

3. And they that be wise shall shine &c.] The words allude to chap. xi. 33, 35, and import, that they, who have been the great "lights" of the world, and have instructed others by their doctrine, and confirmed them in the truth by their sufferings and example, shall have an eminently glorious reward at the day of judgment. So the martyrs are described as having a share in "the first resurrection," Rev. xx. 5. Our Saviour's words plainly allude to this text, Matt. xiii. 43. W. Lowth.

The Judge of all the earth will certainly do right. He hath given the fullest assurance that there is a reward for the righteous; and it is certain, that this reward will be augmented in proportion as men have been more extensively useful, or have advanced the real and best interest of their fellow creatures. In the last verse the reward and punishment are expressed generally as to their degree, and merely said to be perpetual in their duration; in this they are exalted to the highest pitch of distinction in their degree, and their duration is expressed in the strongest terms of pointing out eternity. The design of which is to convince the eminently virtuous, that they are in a more especial manner the favourites of Heaven, and may with greater confidence expect their reward. The glories of the future world are shadowed forth in Scripture by the loftiest and most splendid images in this; but after all, so inadequate is language, and so inferiour the conceptions of the human mind to this great subject, that the finest description of the joys of eternity is that negative one of St. Paul, which he hath in some measure borrowed from Isaiah, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." 1 Cor. ii. 9. Wintle.

4. But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, &c.] To "shut up" a book, and to "seal" it, is the same with concealing the sense of it from common understandings: see chap. viii. 26. The same reason is assigned for this command in both places; namely, because there would be a long interval of time between the date, and the final accomplishment, of the prophecy: compare chap. x. 1. But the nearer that time approached, the more light should men have for understanding the prophecy itself: as is implied in the following words, "many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased:" many shall be inquisitive after truth, and keep correspondence with others for their better information: and the gradual completion of some prophecies shall direct observing readers to form a judgment concerning those particulars which are yet to be fulfilled. W. Lowth.

One cannot help observing here the analogy between God's word and works: not only operations of nature have been unravelled, but every useful art and invention traced out and brought to perfection by the continual labour and successive industry of man. And the like gradual process is observable with respect to the word of God: in its early communication it was wrapt up in mystery, and surrounded by obscurity, for this among other purposes, to excite the attentive observation of men, and engage their diligence; so that by affording proper employment for our active spirits, it may serve to train and habituate them to that temper and frame, which will be a suitable qualification for them in the future world; where we shall be continually exercised in acts of devotion and praise, and be making constant advances in knowledge, goodness, and happiness. Wintle.

5. — behold, there stood other two,] I saw two other angels on the bank of the river Hiddekel, attending upon that supreme Angel, or the Son of God, who appeared in the glorious form above described: see chap. x. 4, 5. W. Lowth.

7. And I heard the man clothed in linen, &c.] And I heard Christ, the great Angel of the covenant, the eternal Son of God, answer him again; who, lifting up both His hands towards heaven, the place of His throne, sware by Himself, and His eternal Father, and blessed Spirit. Bp. Hall.

"Holding up the hand" was a ceremony anciently used in taking an oath: see notes at Gen. xiv. 22; Deut. xxxii. 40. W. Lowth.

—— that it shall be for a time, times, and an half;] That is, as hath been before noticed, for three prophetick years and an half; and three prophetick years and an half are 1260 prophetick days; and 1260 prophetick days are 1260 years. The same time therefore is prefixed for the desolation and the oppression of the Eastern Church, as for the tyranny of the little horn in the Western Church: and it is most remarkable, that the doctrine of Mohammed was first forged at Mecca, and the supremacy of the Pope was established by virtue of a grant from that wicked tyrant Phocas, in the very same year of Christ 606. There is a farther notation of the time in the following words, "and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished:" when the Jews shall be recalled from their dispersion, then all these things shall receive their full and final completion. The Prophet, not sufficiently understanding this answer, inquired, ver. 8, What or how long shall be these latter times, or latter wonders? And it is answered again, ver. 11, that "from the time of the taking away the daily sacrifice, and setting up the abomination that maketh desolate, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." The "setting up of the abomination of desolation" appears to be a general phrase, and comprehensive of various events. It is applied by the writer of the first book of Maccabees, chap. i. 54, to the profanation of the temple by Antiochus, and his setting up the image of Jupiter Olympius upon the altar of God. It is applied by our Saviour, Matt. xxiv. 15, to the destruction of the city and temple by the Romans, under the conduct of Titus, in the reign of Vespasian. It may for the same reason be applied to the Roman emperour Adrian's building a temple to Jupiter Capitolinus, in the same place where the temple of God had stood: and to the misery of the Jews, and the desolation of Judea that followed. It may with equal justice be applied to the Mohammedans invading and desolating Christendom, and converting the churches into mosques: and this latter event seemeth to have been particularly intended in this passage. If this interpretation be true, the religion of Mohammed will prevail in the East the space of 1260 years; and then a great and glorious revolution will follow; perhaps the restoration of the Jews, perhaps the destruction of Antichrist: but another still greater and more glorious will succeed: and what can this be so probably, as the full conversion of the Gentiles to the Church of Christ? For, (ver. 12,) "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." Here then are three different periods assigned, 1260 years, 1290 years, and 1335 years: and what is the precise time of their beginning and consequently of their ending, as well as what are the great and signal events, which will take place at the end of each period, we can only conjecture, time alone can with certainty discover. Bp. Newton.

8. And I heard, but I understood not: &c.] The full discovery was not made to the Prophet, but reserved for future ages, till time should bring it to light. The question that follows, "What shall be the end of these things?" alludes to the like expression having been used in the preceding parts of this book, and especially at chap. x. 14. The inquiry is checked at the next verse, and an intimation given, that it is not so much for the use of the present as of future ages, that this revelation is made. The prophecy is of distant reference and interpretation; it is necessary therefore that it should be involved in obscurity. What is delivered may satisfy the minds of the pious and faithful; but it is not meant that the curious should be gratified, that human pride should be indulged, or that the counsels of God should be made subservient to the ambition of princes, or any sinister designs of man. Wintle.

9. And he said, Go thy way, Daniel: &c.] Such prophecies, as belong to things yet future, especially to the times and circumstances of those things, are few, if any of them, fit for the unlearned to pry into particularly. Nay, the learned themselves, if they are prudent also, will observe what answer the angel gave to the Prophet Daniel: "And I heard, but I understood not: then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things? And he said, Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end." When the proper season comes, possibly in some cases not before the event hath interpreted them, the prophecies will prove their own reality by their clearness; and strengthen, perhaps in an hour of much need, "the patience and the faith of the saints," Rev. xiii. 10. Thus it happened to the Apostles. They understood not beforehand our Saviour's prediction, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." But "when He was risen from the dead, they remembered that He had said this unto them: and they believed the Scripture, and the word which Jesus had said," John ii. 19, 22. Abp. Secker.

10. Many shall be purified, &c.] The persecutions of the faithful are designed for the trial of their faith, and the purification of their lives; see chap. xi. 35. But as for those, who are obstinately bent upon following the corrupt practices, to which they have been accustomed, neither the exhortations nor threatenings of God's word, nor the judgments, which they see overtake others, will prevail with them to forsake their wicked practices. See Rev. ix. 20; xxii. 11. W. Lowth.

——and none of the wicked shall understand; &c.] The holy writers often repeat this maxim, that an honest and good heart is a necessary qualification for receiving and understanding Divine truths. See Isai. vi. 9, &c.; Hos. xiv. 9; John viii. 47; x. 27; xviii. 37. W. Lowth.

It is not less our duty to subject all our vicious inclinations to the authority of holy writ, than our vain prejudices. For if we indulge but one, it will naturally bias us to reject, or misinterpret, whatever is inconsistent with it: and besides, we shall lose the hope of that illumination, without which we can apprehend nothing to good purpose. This is what the angel saith to Daniel, "None of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." And our Saviour promises only, that "if any man will do the will of God, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God," John vii. 17. Abp. Secker.

12. Blessed is he that waiteth, &c.] Some expositors suppose St. John to allude to these words, Rev. xx. 6, where he says, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." In like manner the Prophet here pronounces those blessed, who, after a patient expectation of the fulfilling of God's promises, come to have a share in the enjoyment of them. W. Lowth.

13. But go thou thy way till the end be: &c.] Be content with that state and condition, which God shall appoint thee, till the finishing of all these wonderful events. W. Lowth.

The Prophet had been making inquiries after the end of these wonders; the angel had given him all the information that was needful either for himself or future times, and with this he dismisses him, subjoining at the same time a short epitome of his own fate; that, as he was now far advanced in life, he must expect soon to retire from this world; that he should rest in peace to the time of the end, when he should again be raised up and restored to life, and receive his final allotment from his righteous Judge, before whom he should stand in judgment at the last day, or "at the end of the days."

The word "lot" must here be meant in the good sense, that the Prophet should be ranked among the blessed, and partake of the heavenly inheritance, when the mystery of God shall be perfected. The expression seems to indicate a long space of time. Wintle.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO THE

TWELVE MINOR PROPHETS.

THE writings of the twelve Minor Prophets were in the Hebrew canon comprised in one book, which was called by St. Stephen "the Book of the Prophets," Acts vii. 42, compared with Amos v. 25. By whom they were so compiled is uncertain; probably, however, they were collected together in that form by Ezra, or by some member of the Great Synagogue; but certainly above 200 years before the birth of Christ.

The twelve Minor Prophets were so called, not in respect to any supposed inferiority in their writings as to matter or style, but in reference to the brevity of their works. The shortness, indeed, of these prophecies seems to have been one reason for joining them together; by which means the volume of their contents was swelled to a greatness in some degree correspondent to their importance.

These twelve Prophets furnish us in scattered parts with a lively sketch of many particulars relative to other kingdoms; they describe in prophetick anticipation, but with historical exactness, the fate of Babylon, of Nineveh, of Tyre, of Sidon, and of Damascus. The three last Prophets especially illustrate many circumstances at a period, when the historical pages of Scripture are closed, and when profane authors are entirely wanting. They describe, under the most striking representations, the advent and character of the Messiah and His kingdom; and endeavour, by the most admirable instruction, to excite those religious sentiments, which would facilitate the reception of the Gospel. Dr. Gray.

HOSEA.

INTRODUCTION.

HOSEA has been supposed to be the most ancient of the twelve Minor Prophets; and indeed by some writers he is represented as having preceded all the Prophets, since he flourished about the middle of the reign of Jeroboam the Second, the son of Joash, king of Israel, and towards the commencement of that of Uzziah, who began to reign over Jerusalem about the year of the world 3194. According to some accounts of no great authority, he was of the tribe of Issachar, and of the city of Beleenor; others represent him to have been of the tribe of Judah. He was the son of Beeri, and entered on the prophetick office some time between the years of the world 3194 and 3219. He continued to prophesy above sixty years: during the successive reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, and probably to about the third year of the reign of the last; or, if we reckon by the kings of Israel, he may be described as having flourished during the reign of Jeroboam and his successors, to the sixth year of Hoshea, which corresponds with the third year of Hezekiah. Hosea was therefore nearly contemporary with Isaiah, Amos, and Jonah. It is probable that he resided chiefly in Samaria; and that he was the first Prophet, of those at least whose prophecies we possess, that predicted the destruction of that country; which was effected soon after the Prophet's death by Shalmaneser, king of Assyria. Dr. Gray.

Hosea's principal subject is that which is the principal subject indeed of all the Prophets; the guilt of the Jewish nation in general, their disobedient refractory spirit, the heavy judgments that awaited them, their final conversion to God, their re-establishment in the land of promise, and their restoration to God's favour, under the immediate protection of the Messiah, in the latter ages of the world. He confines himself more closely to this single subject than any other Prophet. Comparatively, he seems to care little about other people. He wanders not, like Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, into the collateral history of surrounding heathen nations. He meddles not, like Daniel, with the revolutions of the great empires of the world. His own country seems to engross his whole attention; her privileges, her crimes, her punishment, her pardon. He predicts, indeed, in the strongest and the clearest terms, the ingrafting of the Gentiles into the Church of God: but he mentions it only generally; he enters not, like Isaiah, into a minute detail of the progress of the business. He alludes to the calling of our Lord from Egypt; and to the resurrection on the third day; and he celebrates, in the loftiest strains of triumph and exultation, the Saviour's final victory over death and hell. But yet, of all the Prophets, he certainly enters the least into the detail of the mysteries of redemption. We have nothing in him descriptive of the events of the interval between the two advents of our Lord: nothing diffuse and circumstantial, upon the great and interesting mysteries of the Incarnation, and the Atonement. His country, and his kindred, is the subject next his heart. Their crimes excite his indignation; their sufferings interest his pity; their future exaltation is the object on which his imagination fixes with delight. It is a remarkable dispensation of Providence, that clear notices, though in general terms, of the universal redemption, should be found in a writer so strongly possessed with national partialities. This Judaism, if I may so call it, seems to make the particular character of Hosea as a Prophet. Not that the ten tribes are exclusively his subject. His country is indeed his particular and constant subject; but his country generally, in both its branches, not in either taken by itself.

Hosea delights in a style, which always becomes obscure, when the language of the writer ceases to be a living language. He writes in short, detached, disjointed sentences; not wrought up into artificial periods. His transitions from reproof to persuasion, from threatening to promise, from terrour to hope, and the contrary, are rapid and unexpected. His similes are brief, accumulated, and often introduced without the particle of similitude. Yet these are not the vices, but the perfections of the holy Prophet's style: for to these circumstances it owes that eagerness and fiery animation, which are the characteristick excellence of his writings, and are so peculiarly suited to his subject. Bp. Horsley.

The book of Hosea is cited by St. Matthew as unquestionably the inspired production of a Prophet, Matt. ii. 15; as likewise by St. Paul, Rom. ix. 25, 26; 1 Cor. xv. 55; and, indeed, by Christ Himself, Matt. ix. 12, 13; xii. 7. Dr. Gray.

Chap. I. Under the figure of a wife living in adultery, and bearing illegitimate children, is represented the great idolatry of the children of Israel, which provoked God to cast them off; yet with the promise of repairing that loss, by bringing in the Gentiles into the Church, and afterwards uniting Israel and Judah under one head, the Messiah. The Prophet likewise foretells the extinction of Jehu's family. W. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — in the days of Uzziah, — and in the days of Jeroboam] Jeroboam, the son of Joash, the second king of Israel of that name, and contemporary with Uzziah, is here mentioned, because this prophecy very nearly concerns the kingdom of Israel. There was no need of enumerating any of the succeeding kings of Israel, because, from the Prophet's mention of his prophesying from the times of Uzziah to those of Hezekiah, it follows that he prophesied all the reigns of Jeroboam's successors; the reign of Hezekiah bearing date from the third year of Hoshea, the last of the kings of Israel. W. Lowth.

2. — by Hosea.] To speak "to Hosea," ver. 1, and "by Hosea," in this verse, are phrases of different import. To speak to expresses, that to him the discourse was immediately addressed. To speak by, that through him it was addressed to others: and that the speech, so addressed to others, was not the Prophet's own, but God's; God using the Prophet as His organ of speech to the people. Bp. Horsley.

—— Go, take unto thee a wife of whoredoms and children of whoredoms:] That is, Marry a wife, who will afterwards, namely, after the birth of her first child, prove unfaithful to thy bed, and bear children begotten by others; for hereby will be most fitly, and even sensibly represented to the people of Israel their like base dealing with Me: inasmuch as the people of the land have committed the like great spiritual whoredom, departing from the Lord, and worshipping idols. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth.

Some commentators understand by "a wife of whoredoms" a wife, that had heretofore been noted for unchastity, howsoever now reclaimed. Bp. Hall, Junius.

3. So he went and took Gomer — which conceived, &c.] After the marriage the Prophet's wife bore three children. These children represent certain distinct parts or descriptions of the Jewish nation, of the whole of which the mother was the emblem. Of the three children, the eldest and the youngest were sons; the intermediate child was a daughter. The eldest appears to have been the Prophet's son; but the two last were illegitimate. Bp. Horsley.

4. — Call his name Jezreel;] The names, imposed upon the children by God's direction, sufficiently declare what particular parts of the Jewish nation were severally represented by them. The name of the first was Jezreel, importing "seed of God;" and the persons, represented by the Prophet's proper son, to whom the name is given, were all those true servants of God, scattered among all the twelve tribes of Israel, who, in the times of the nation's greatest depravity, worshipped the everlasting God, in the hope of the Redeemer to come. These were a holy seed; the genuine sons of God; begotten of Him to a lively hope, and the early seed of that Church, which shall at last embrace all the families of the earth. These are Jezreel, typified by the Prophet's own son and rightful heir, as the children of God, and heirs of the promises. Bp. Horsley.

—— I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu,] That is, the blood of the holy seed, the faithful servants of God, shed by the idolatrous princes of Jehu's family in persecution, and the blood of children shed in their horrible rites upon the altars of their idols. Bp. Horsley.

—— and will cause to cease the kingdom of the house of Israel.] It is said, that what is here threatened shall be done after "a little while" upon the house of Jehu; and it is added, as a consequence on it, or what should be effected together with it, or by it, that "the kingdom of Israel should cease." So he saith, "yet a little while." The time was not yet come, that it could be done, because God's promise to Jehu was, that "his children of the fourth generation should sit on the throne of Israel;" and the present king Jeroboam was but the third from him. In the time of Zachariah, who succeeded Jeroboam, and reigned but six months, what is here said was effected. And so both the promise before made, and the curse now denounced, were in their due time fulfilled. Dr. Edward Pocock.

5. And it shall come to pass at that day,] Quickly after the extinction of Jehu's family. W. Lowth.

—— I will break the bow of Israel in the valley of Jezreel.] See 2 Kings xv. 29; and xvii. 5, 6. The taking of several cities successively, and at last of the capital itself, was a "breaking of the bow of Israel," a demolition of the whole military strength of the kingdom "in the valley of Jezreel," where all those cities were situated. Bp. Horsley.

The bow, being in those times of great use in war, was figuratively and proverbially taken for all sorts of military arms and instruments; and also for all strength of war. Dr. Pocock.

6. — Call her name Lo-ruhamah:] All of the Jewish people, that were not Jezreel, the "seed of God," those who were not Israel, though they were of Israel, are typified by the two illegitimate children. The first of these, the daughter, was called Lo-ruhamah. The sex of the child is the emblem of weakness. Her name signifies "unbeloved," or "unpitied;" or, as it is paraphrased in the margin of our Bible, in conformity with all the ancient versions, "not having obtained mercy." This daughter typifies the people of the ten tribes, in the enfeebled state of their declining monarchy, torn by intestine commotions and perpetual revolutions, harassed by powerful invaders, impoverished by their tyrannical exactions, and condemned by the just judgment of God to utter excision as a distinct kingdom, without hope of restoration: for so the type is explained by the Holy Spirit Himself. Bp. Horsley.

7. But I will have mercy upon the house of Judah,] It was an aggravation of the guilt of Israel, that idolatry was the very foundation of her polity. Her very existence, as a distinct kingdom, was founded on the worship of the calves, which was instituted by Jeroboam for preventing the return of the ten tribes to their allegiance to the house of David. The two tribes, on the contrary, remained loyally attached to David's family; and the idolatry, into which from time to time they fell, was rather the lapse of individuals, than the premeditated policy of the nation. Except in the reigns of one or two of their very worst kings, the publick religion was the worship of the true God, according to the rites of His own appointment, by a priesthood of His own institution. And this was probably the reason, that the kingdom of Judah, though severely punished, was however treated with longer forbearance; and, when the dreadful judgment came, in some respects with more lenity. Bp. Horsley.

—— and will save them by the Lord their God, &c.] This promise may be principally referred to their deliverance from captivity, not by human means, but by God's moving the heart of Cyrus to restore them, Ezra i. 1, &c. Dr. Pocock.

In the different treatment of the house of Judah and the house of Israel, we see the prophecy hitherto remarkably verified. After the excision of the kingdom of the ten tribes, Judah, though occasionally visited with severe judgments, continued however to be cherished with God's love, till they rejected our Lord. Then Judah became Lo-ammi; (see note on ver. 9:) but still continues to be visibly an object of God's love, preserved as a distinct race for gracious purposes of mercy. Bp. Horsley.

—— by the Lord their God,] Interpreters observe, that this expression may allude to the salvation to be accomplished by the Messiah, who is GOD as well as man; the Lord being spoken of as a distinct Person from the principal Author of the salvation here promised. Compare Isai. xxxv. 4; xl. 9. W. Lowth.

There is one certain deliverance, promised to the Jews in one Prophet after another, by the name of "salvation by the Lord," by "the Lord God Himself," as superiour to and different from their former deliverances by flesh and blood; and this the Jews appropriate to the redemption of the Messiah. God saves, and God judges, by Him. And He is therefore termed "the Lord" in Mal. iii. 1, as being Emmanuel, the God, the Saviour with us. Bp. Chandler.

8, 9. — she conceived, and bare a son. Then said God, Call his name Lo-ammi:] The child conceived after Lo-ruhamah was weaned, must typify the people of the kingdom of Judah, in the subsequent periods of their history. Or rather, this child typifies the whole nation of the children of Israel, reduced, in its external form, by the captivity of the ten tribes, to that single kingdom. The sex represents a considerable degree of national strength and vigour, remaining in this branch of the Jewish people, very different from the exhausted state of the other kingdom previous to its fall. Nor have the two tribes ever suffered so total an excision. The ten were absolutely lost in the world soon after their captivity. But the people of Judah have never ceased totally to be. In captivity at Babylon they lived a separate race, respected by their conquerors. From that captivity they returned. They became an opulent and powerful state; formidable at times to the rival powers of Syria and Egypt; and held in no small consideration by the Roman people, and the first emperours of Rome. And even in their present state of ruin and degradation, without territory and without polity of their own, such is the masculine strength of suffering with which they are endued, they are still extant in the world, as a separate race, but not as God's people, otherwise than as they are reserved for signal mercy; God grant it may be at no very distant period! But at the present they are Lo-ammi, "Not My people." And so they have actually been more than seventeen centuries and a half; and to this condition they were condemned when this prophecy was delivered. Bp. Horsley.

9. — for ye are not my people,] That is, "Ye, O men of Judah, are not My people." Bp. Horsley.

10. Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, &c.] We learn from St. Paul, that Israel is a name, not only belonging to those, who are so according to the flesh, but comprehending all, that rightly believe in God, all the seed of Israel and Abraham, as well that which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of all believers, as that which is of the flesh and of the law, Rom. iv. 11, 16; Gal. iii. 7. So that by the multitude of believers, as well of the Gentiles as of the Jews, is this to be made good, that "the number of the children of Israel should be as the sand of the sea." Dr. Pocock.

—— and it shall come to pass, that in the place &c.] That is, at Jerusalem, or at least in Judea, where this prophecy was delivered, and where the execution of the sentence took place. This prophecy appears to promise the restoration of the natural Israel of the house of Judah to their own land. Bp. Horsley.

Or, the promise may extend to others, as well as to them; even to as many of other nations, who had ever been looked on as "not God's people," as the whole Gentile world were; and that any where, in any place: even to "as many as the Lord our God should call," Acts ii. 39. Dr. Pocock.

11. Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together, &c.] When "the fulness of the Gentiles is come in," this will be a means of converting the Jews, and bringing them into the Church: see Rom. ix. 25, 26. Either the prediction signifies, that upon this will follow the restoration of the Jewish nation, when they shall return into their own country from the several dispersions, where they were scattered, and become one nation or kingdom under the Messiah, their Head and King. Compare Ezek. xxxvii. 21, 22; Mic. ii. 13. W. Lowth. Or, the being "gathered together" denotes, not so much their coming together into one place, as consent and agreement of mind, the effect of which shall be, that they shall with one accord submit to one government. Dr. Pocock.

—— and appoint themselves one head,] The title of "Head" is often given to Christ in the New Testament: see Eph. i. 22; iv. 15; v. 23; Col. i. 18; so that in Him, who is our peace, all farther difference and enmity being taken away, both Jews and Gentiles are made one, Eph. ii. 15, 16, as one body under one head. Dr. Pocock.

—— and they shall come up out of the land:] Jerusalem being situated on an eminence, and in the heart of a mountainous region, which rose greatly above the general level of the country to a great distance on all sides, the sacred writers always speak of persons going to Jerusalem, as "going up." Bp. Horsley.

This mountain being a type of the Church of Christ, it is very proper and significant language to say of those, who should come into the Church, that they should "come up out of the land." Dr. Pocock.

—— for great shall be the day of Jezreel.] Great and happy shall be the day, when the holy seed of both branches of the natural Israel shall be publickly acknowledged of their God; united under one head, their King Messiah; and restored to the possession of the promised land, and to a situation of high pre-eminence among the kingdoms of the earth. Bp. Horsley. Or, taking the words in a spiritual sense, we may understand "the day of Jezreel" as comprehending the whole time of grace and salvation; all the time since the appearance of Christ, that "one Head," in whom they, of whom it is said "ye are not My people," are called "the sons of the living God," and are all gathered together, and ascend out of the world. Dr. Pocock.

Chap. II. ver. 1. Say ye unto your brethren, Ammi; and to your sisters, Ruhamah.] Although the Israelites, in the days of Hosea, were in general corrupt and addicted to idolatry, yet there were among them in the worst times some, who had not bowed the knee to Baal. These were always Ammi, and Ruhamah; God's own people, and a darling daughter. It is probable that God here commissions these faithful few to admonish the inhabitants of the land in general, of the dreadful judgments that would be brought upon them by the gross idolatry of the Jewish Church and nation. Speak to your brethren, O Ammi, (O My people,) and to your sisters, O Ruhamah, (O darling daughter.) Bp. Horsley.

2. Plead with your mother, &c.] Because by her false dealing with God, and alienating herself from God, she hath alienated His mind from her, and so far provoked Him, that He hath declared He will in severity of judgment proceed against her and her children; let her, that she may avert God's displeasure and reconcile Him again to her, turn to Him by repentance, and put away from her her idolatries, her spiritual fornications, and evil doings; and let her children, that she may do so, and that they may escape God's judgments, plead with her, call on her so to do, and endeavour her reformation. This is plainly the scope of the words. The expressions are figurative. Dr. Pocock.

3. —— and set her as in the day that she was born,] Bare, helpless, and unprotected. Dr. Pocock.

—— and make her as a wilderness, &c.] When a woman is the image of a country, or of a church, that may be said of the woman, which, in unfigured speech, might be said of the country, or the church she represents. The country might literally be made a waste wilderness, by unfruitful seasons, by the devastations of war, or of noxious vermin; a church is made a wilderness and a parched land when the living waters of the Spirit are withheld. Bp. Horsley.

5. —— she said, I will go after my lovers,] I will go after others, whom I esteem as my lovers: that is, I love rather to worship idol gods, as thinking them the gods that give me my bread, &c. Dr. Wells.

—— my drink.] "My liquors:" such as milk, honey, wine, &c. Bp. Horsley.

The base and degraded state of the Israelites is here very remarkable, in that they make no mention of those high spiritual privileges, which distinguished them from all other nations, of their laws and statutes, of God's grace and favour, and the light of His countenance, but have regard only to those things which concern their inferiour part, and are common to them with beasts. Those, whom Israel supposes to give her these things, are "her lovers," and to them she will surrender her affections. It is a farther proof of her stupidity and aggravated ingratitude, that whereas it was God, who had furnished her with all these favours, as well as those of a more excellent nature, being glutted and intoxicated with abundance, she forgets God, and plainly denies Him to be the Author of them. Dr. Pocock.

6. — I will hedge up thy way &c.] See the like expressions in Lam. iii. 7, 9; Job xix. 8. Whence this appears to be a proverbial kind of speech, taken from what is usually done among men, when they would stop up a way, and hinder others from going in it, to put before it an hedge of thorns, or to cross it with a wall. Dr. Pocock.

—— with thorns,] See the note on Mic. vii. 4.

7. — then shall she say, I will go and return to my first husband;] She shall be forced to acknowledge, that when she clave unto God, who in lovingkindness had espoused her to Himself, and entered into covenant with her, and called her to His service, and is therefore called her "first Husband," it was much better with her than it is now. By the good providence of God such evils are often brought upon men, that by their calamities in this world they may be compelled to return to the service of God. Dr. Pocock.

ledge or profess, what she could not, except willingly and perversely, be ignorant of: she laid it not to heart, but behaved herself, as if she knew it not. Dr. Pocock.

—— which they prepared for Baal.] Which they offered or consecrated to Baal. Abp. Newcome.

It was a grievous charge, which God here preferred against the Israelites, that His corn, and wine, and oil, and silver, and gold, which He had given them, they employed in the service of Baal, an abominable idol. If, when God giveth us wit, wealth, power, authority, health, strength, liberty, or any other good things, instead of using these things to His glory, and the relief of His servants, we abuse them to the service of those idols, which we have set up in our hearts, to our pride, our covetousness, or our sensuality, we are as liable to the charge as the Israelites were; as unjust, as profane, as unthankful in every respect as they. Bp. Sanderson.

9. Therefore will I return, and take away my corn &c.] That is, I will again take away My corn &c. The happy and prosperous condition of the people shall be changed into a general want and penury of all things necessary for their well being. Dr. Pocock. It appears from all the Prophets, and particularly from Amos and Joel, that the beginning of judgment upon the refractory, rebellious people, was in unfruitful seasons, and noxious vermin, producing a failure of the crops, dearth, murrain of the cattle, famine, and pestilential diseases. Bp. Horsley.

10. And now will I discover her lewdness] Or, as in the margin, "her folly," or "villany." By hiding My face from them, and depriving them of My blessings, I will make it appear how foolish, how shameful, how lewd, how vile and base they were in forsaking God and following idols. And this God threatens to do "in the sight," or presence, "of her lovers," that is, of her idols. Dr. Pocock.

11. I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast days, &c.] The publick festivals are frequently called days of joy and gladness: the observation of several of these festivals was retained in the worship of the golden calves: see 1 Kings xii. 32; Amos viii. 5. God here threatens them, that under their captivity they should have no opportunity to celebrate these festivals, since they had so much abused those solemn seasons of Divine worship. See chap. ix. 4, 5; Amos viii. 10. W. Lowth.

13. And I will visit upon her the days of Baalim,] I will punish her for all the idolatries she has committed from the days of Jeroboam, who first set up the worship of false gods. W. Lowth.

14. Therefore, behold, &c.] Here is a plain alteration of style from threatenings to promises; so that the first word should be rendered Nevertheless. See the note on Isai. xxx. 18. W. Lowth.

—— I will allure her,] Or, persuade her. Though the word commonly signifies to inveigle, to deceive, it may be used by an easy metaphor in a good sense. Abp. Newcome.

—— and bring her into the wilderness,] These words, joined with the preceding, should be understood in this manner: "I will allure her," by means of the persuasive doctrine of the Gospel; "and" for that end, or in order to produce that effect, "I will bring her into the wilderness:" meaning that this was the way or method by which He would prepare them to receive His persuasions. As the method, which God had used with the Israelites of old, for withdrawing them from the corruptions of Egypt, and making them His peculiar people, was by disciplining them in the wilderness; so He now says that He will employ the like method for weaning them from their idolatries, and inclining their hearts to Him; namely, by bringing them into a condition, as painful as that of their forefathers in the wilderness; a condition of captivity among the heathen, in which they should be disciplined in the knowledge of God and their dependence upon Him. Dr. Pocock.

—— and speak comfortably unto her.] Speak what shall touch her heart, in her outcast state in the wilderness of the Gentile world, by the proffers of mercy in the Gospel. Bp. Horsley.

15. And I will give her her vineyards from thence,] I will not only speak kindly and comfortably to her, but by deeds also and benefits, actually bestowed upon her, will testify My favour towards her. These words of promise seem opposed to the former threat, "I will take away My wine in the season thereof," ver. 9; and "I will destroy her vines," ver. 12. "From thence" may signify either from that place, or from that time. Dr. Pocock.

—— and the valley of Achor for a door of hope:] "The valley of Achor," that is, of tribulation, or consternation; alluding to the vale near Jericho, where the first Israelites, first setting foot within the Holy Land, were thrown into trouble and consternation; but immediately afterwards found it "a door of hope;" for from that time, Joshua having received fresh encouragement from God, drove on his conquests with uninterrupted success. In like manner the tribulations of the Jews, in their present dispersion, shall open to them the door of hope; and "she shall sing there," that is, in the wilderness, and in the vale of tribulation, under those circumstances of present difficulty mixed with cheering hope. Bp. Horsley.

—— and she shall sing there, as in the days of her youth, &c.] These words are a continued allusion to the history of the Israelites of old, and to the great deliverance wrought for them in the time of Moses; "in the days of her youth," when, as Jeremiah limits the term, "she went after God in the wilderness," Jer. ii. 2. The promise "she shall sing," appears opposed to what was threatened in her state of rebellion, "I will also cause all her mirth to cease," ver. 11. Dr. Pocock.

16. — thou shalt call me] Here is a change from the third to the second person, not unusual in Scripture. Dr. Pocock. See the note from Bp. Lowth on Deut. xxxii. 5.

given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind," 2 Tim. i. 7. See Jer. xxiii. 27. Bp. Horsley.

The word "Baali" often signifies an husband, and is particularly spoken of God, as He was by His covenant-relation an husband to His people; see Isai. liv. 5; Jer. iii. 14. But the word "Baal" having been so much profaned by being given to idols, He forbade it to be applied any more to Himself. As it follows, according to the sense of the next verse, He would utterly abolish the idols, the "Baalim," which they had before served, and leave no occasion for farther remembrance of them, such as the very use of the name, by which they were called, might be in danger of causing. W. Lowth, Dr. Pocock.

17. For I will take away &c.] He, from whom is both to will and to do, here promises His help and the assistance of His grace for the conversion of Israel, so that she, who was before wholly addicted and wedded to her Baals, might conceive a detestation of them, and an abhorrence even of their names. Compare Deut. xxx. 6; Zech. xiii. 2. Dr. Pocock.

18. And in that day will I make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field, &c.] That is, I will cause that they shall not do any injury, but shall be as harmless, as if they were bound by a covenant or league of peace. These expressions are figurative, and relate to the times of the Gospel. Compare Matt. xvi. 17, 18; Luke x. 19. Dr. Pocock.

—— I will break — the battle] The Hebrews often use a verb, which is applicable to some of the substantives placed after it, but not to all. See Mic. vi. 15; Zeph. i. 17; Mal. iii. 5. Abp. Newcome.

19. And I will betroth thee unto me &c.] I will enter into a new covenant with My Church, consisting of the converted Jews, and increased by the coming in of the fulness of the Gentiles; wherein I will eminently display My attributes of righteousness and equity, of lovingkindness, mercy, and faithfulness. W. Lowth.

20. — and thou shalt know the Lord.] That is, by thy experience of His goodness and lovingkindness, "thou shalt know Him" to be the Lord Jehovah, the powerful God, who always makes good what He hath said, which is the chief meaning of the name Jehovah: or, thou shalt have, not only a bare knowledge of God, but at the same time such a due acknowledgment of Him, as influences the practice, and produces love correspondent to that which He displays. Such knowledge comprehends all the fruits of faith, and sincere obedience to His commandments. "Is not this to know Me? saith the Lord," Jer. xxii. 16. Dr. Pocock.

21. — I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth; &c.] All creatures shall answer the desires and wants of My people: the heavens shall answer the wants of the earth, in sending down seasonable showers; and the earth shall answer the wants of mankind, in bringing forth corn, and wine, and other necessaries of life; and the very fruits of the earth shall answer the wishes of My people, now returned into their own land, by giving them due nourishment. The same sense is more plainly expressed in Zechariah, chap. viii. 12, "The seed shall be prosperous," &c. W. Lowth. In short, all second causes shall, by God's appointment, duly concur for the welfare and happiness of His then Christian Church, which may be fitly styled "Jezreel," according to their prayers, and upon their steady obedience to Him. Dr. Wells.

23. And I will sow her unto me in the earth;] Here is a plain allusion to the word "Jezreel," mentioned just before, which signifies the seed of God: the Prophet foretells a plentiful increase of true believers, like that of corn sown in the earth. Compare Zech. x. 9. W. Lowth.

The myriads of the natural Israel, converted by the preaching of the Apostles, were the first seed of the universal Church. And there is reason to believe, that the restoration of the converted Jews will be the occasion and means of a prodigious influx of new converts from the Gentiles in the latter ages, Rom. xi. 12, 15. Thus the Jezreel of the natural Israel from the first have been, and to the last will prove, a seed sown of God for Himself in the earth. Bp. Horsley.

Chap. III. ver. 1. — Go yet, love a woman &c.] This was probably the same woman, mentioned chap. i. 3; who upon her infidelity was parted from her husband. Still he had a kindness for her, and was willing to receive her on condition of her reformation. The Hebrew word, rendered "friend," is used for an husband, Jer. iii. 20; Cant. v. 16. W. Lowth.

—— the children of Israel,] "Children of Israel," and "house of Israel," are two distinct expressions to be differently understood. "The house of Israel," and sometimes "Israel" by itself, is a particular appellation of the ten tribes, as a distinct kingdom from Judah. But "the children of Israel" is a general appellation for the whole race of the Israelites, comprehending both kingdoms. Bp. Horsley.

—— and love flagons of wine.] By following those bodily delights and pleasures, such as drunkenness, gluttony, and the like, which the service of the heathen idols permitted, or required: or perhaps by partaking in the wine, which was drunk at the heathen sacrifices. Dr. Pocock.

his property, if he thought fit to claim her, by virtue of the marriage already had: but it was a present supply of her necessary wants, by which he acknowledged her as his wife, and engaged to furnish her with alimony, not ample indeed, but suitable to the recluse life which he prescribed to her. The parsimonious gift, a sum of money which was but half the price of a female slave, and a pittance of black barley bread, typified the hard fare, which the Israelites were to expect at the hand of God, in their state of exile. Bp. Horsley. In certain marriage contracts in the East, there is always the formality of a measure of corn mentioned over and above the stipulated sum of money. Sir J. Chardin.

3. — Thou shalt abide for me many days;] That is, Thou shalt stay sequestered, and as in a state of widowhood, till the time that I shall be fully reconciled to thee, and see fit again to receive thee to the privileges of a wife. Dr. Pocock.

—— thou shalt not be for another man:] The word "another" is not in the Hebrew: so the sentence may be thus translated, more agreeably to the original, Thou shalt not have an husband, neither will I have thee (to my wife). W. Lowth, Dr. Pocock. The condition of the woman, restrained from licentious courses, owned as a wife, but without restitution of conjugal rites, admirably represents the present state of the Jews, manifestly owned as a peculiar people, withheld from idolatry, but as yet without access to God through the Saviour. Bp. Horsley.

4. For the children of Israel shall abide many days &c.] This threatening has been most remarkably fulfilled upon the whole nation of the Jews, from the destruction of Jerusalem by Vespasian unto this day. W. Lowth.

——without a king, and without a prince,] Without a monarch, and without any government of their own. Bp. Horsley.

—— without a sacrifice,] Deprived of the means of offering the typical sacrifices of the law, and having as yet no share in the true sacrifice of Christ. Bp. Horsley.

—— without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim:] These are mentioned as principal implements of idolatrous rites. And the sum of the fourth verse is this: that for many ages the Jews would not be their own masters; would be deprived of the exercise of their own religion, in its most essential parts; not embracing the Christian, they would have no share in the true, service; and yet would be restrained from idolatry, to which their forefathers had been so prone. Bp. Horsley.

5. — David their king;] See note on Jer. xxx. 9. As it is said in Isaiah, chap. xi. 10, that "the Gentiles should seek to the Root of Jesse," that is, the Messiah; so it is here said that the children of Israel shall seek the same Messiah as their King. Dr. Pocock.

Chap. IV. ver. 2. — they break out,] They are become profligate and impudent; they have broken out beyond all bounds, like swelling waters, gotten out of their banks, and overflowing the land. Dr. Pocock.

—— blood toucheth blood.] There are murders committed without intermission: one overtaketh and reacheth to another. Abp. Newcome.

3. — with the beasts of the field, &c.] The cattle and the fowls shall be affected by the scarcity with which God shall visit the land; and He will so dispose second causes, that even the fishes of the sea shall not supply the wants of His rebellious people. Abp. Newcome.

4. — let no man strive, nor reprove another:] Because the case of the people was desperate, and it would be lost labour to reprove them. W. Lowth.

—— strive with the priest.] To "strive," or contend, with the priest, the authorised interpreter of the law, and the typical intercessor between God and the people, was the highest species of contumacy and disobedience, and by the law was a capital offence: see Deut. xvii. 12. God tells the Prophet, that contumacy and perverseness, even in this degree, were become the general character of the people. That the national obstinacy and contempt of the remonstrances and reproofs of the Prophets were such as might be compared with the stubbornness of an individual; who at the peril of his life would arraign and disobey the judicial decisions of God's priests. Bp. Horsley.

It was in the prophetical times an expression signifying height of impiety, "Thy people are as they that strive with the priest." Seeing then God hath no less regard to His peculiar servants now than He had then; seeing they no less represent Him, and act by His authority now, than any did then; seeing their service is as precious to Him, and as much tendeth to His honour now, as the Levitical service then did; seeing He no less loveth order and peace in the Church, than He did in the Synagogue; we may well suppose it a no less heinous sin, and odious to God, to despise the ministers of Christ's Gospel, than it was before to despise the ministers of Moses's law. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

5. Therefore shalt thou fall] The last sentence was addressed to the Prophet: "thy people," O prophet. This is to the people themselves: "Thou," O stubborn people. Bp. Horsley. See the note on Deut. xxxii. 5.

—— in the day, — in the night,] Neither the light shall afford thee a way of escaping the evil; nor the darkness cover thee from it. Dr. Pocock.

—— and I will destroy thy mother.] That is, thy mother city, the metropolis: namely, Jerusalem, the metropolis of the whole nation, or of the children of Israel. Bp. Horsley.

their lives according to it. The end of His giving them His laws and commandments was, that they might so know them, as to keep and do them: that was reckoned their "wisdom and understanding," Deut. iv. 6; and the doing according to His commandments He declares to be the knowledge of Him, Jer. xxii. 16. Dr. Pocock.

—— because thou hast rejected &c.] These denunciations are addressed to the high priest for the time being, as the representative of the whole order. The priests are taxed with negligence of their duty, in not teaching the people, and in suffering a general ignorance to prevail; and for this crime they are threatened with the abolition of their order. Bp. Horsley.

It is very observable, how the sin and the punishment run parallel, and are proportioned one to the other. The crimes objected are, that they "rejected knowledge," and that they "forgot the law of their God." The punishment proportioned to the first, that He also would "reject" them, that they should be "no priests to Him;" to the second, that He would also "forget their children." Dr. Pocock.

7. As they were increased, so they sinned against me:] The priesthood among the Jews was, by God's appointment, a situation of the highest rank and authority. The complaint is, that, in proportion as they were raised in dignity and power above the rest of the people, they surpassed the rest in impiety. Bp. Horsley.

8. They eat up the sin of my people, and they set their heart on their iniquity.] The meaning is, that it was their ordinary custom, under pretence of the right of their office, to receive from the people their sin offerings, and to feed upon them. At the same time, "they set their heart on their iniquity;" that is, they were desirous that the people should commit sin, that so the sin offerings might come in to them. Dr. Pocock.

9. And there shall be, like people, like priest:] As they are alike in sinning, so shall they be in punishment. W. Lowth.

11. — take away the heart.] These words are expressed as a general sentiment of acknowledged truth: they are however to be particularly applied to the Israelites, and show the reason of their having so wickedly forsaken God, and "left off to take heed" to Him and His ways. They had devoted themselves to these sinful indulgencies, the bad effects of which are, to "take away the heart" of men, to make them brutish in their understanding; and which accordingly had taken away their hearts, and wholly corrupted their minds and judgments, and deprived them of their reason. Dr. Pocock.

12. — their stocks, — their staff] Both these terms probably mean their wooden idols. Dr. Pocock.

13. — because the shadow thereof is good:] This suggests a natural cause, why groves and trees were scenes of idolatry in hot countries. Abp. Newcome.

—— therefore your daughters shall commit whoredom,] God delivers men up to "vile affections," as a punishment for their idolatry. See Rom. i. 26. W. Lowth.

14. I will not punish your daughters &c.] I will not chastise that in your children and wives, which ye, that are the parents and husbands, are willingly guilty of. Bp. Hall.

—— for themselves are separated] There is a change of person in the pronoun "themselves," whereas in the former part of the verse the second person is used, "your daughters," and "your spouses." A similar change occurs in the foregoing verse; from "they" to "your." Dr. Pocock. See the note on ver. 5.

—— harlots:] The Hebrew word here signifies such as prostituted themselves in an idol temple, in honour of the idol: such impure practices were frequent in the heathen temples dedicated to Venus, and such licentious deities: see Baruch vi. 43. W. Lowth.

15. Though thou, Israel, play the harlot, &c.] Here a transition is made, with great elegance and animation, from the general subject of the whole people, in both its branches, to the kingdom of the ten tribes in particular. Whatever the obstinacy of the house of Israel may be in her corruptions, at least let Judah keep herself pure. Let her not join in the idolatrous worship at Gilgal or Beth-aven, or mix idolatry with the profession of the true religion. As for Israel, I give her up to a reprobate mind. Then the discourse passes naturally to the detail and amplification of Israel's guilt. Bp. Horsley.

—— and come not ye unto Gilgal,] Come not ye, O men of Judah. Bp. Horsley.

Gilgal was a remarkable place for the renewing of the rite of circumcision, Josh. v. 9. There the people afterwards used to offer sacrifices, 1 Sam. xv. 21. After Jeroboam's establishment of idolatry, it was noted for the worship of false gods, as appears by comparing this text with chap. ix. 15; xii. 11; Amos iv. 4; v. 5. In those places of Amos, as well as in this verse, it is joined with Beth-el, noted for the worship of one of Jeroboam's calves; called Beth-aven here, and in chap. x. 5. Beth-el originally signifies "the house of God;" that name was given it by Jacob, because of God's appearing to him there, Gen. xxviii. 17. But when it became the seat of idolatry, it was called "Beth-aven," the house of vanity. W. Lowth.

wide common. They shall no longer be fed with care in the rich enclosures of God's cultivated farm; but turned out to browse the scanty herbage of the waste. That is, they shall be driven into exile among the heathen, freed from what they thought the restraints, and of consequence deprived of all the blessings and benefits, of religion. This dreadful menace is delivered in the form of severe derision: a figure much used by the Prophets, especially by Hosea. Bp. Horsley.

18. Their drink is sour:] The verse taxes them with three great vices; drunkenness, whoredom, and bribery. W. Lowth. Their intemperance is odious; they have committed whoredom continually; her rulers are all for bribes, and are not ashamed to say, "Give." Bp. Hall.

Chap. V. ver. 1. — for judgment is toward you, because ye have been a snare &c.] That is, as dangerous and destructive as "snares" and "nets" spread by hunters and fowlers on the mountains, particularly those of Mizpah and Tabor. Dr. Pocock.

2. And the revolters are profound to make slaughter,] The ringleaders in idolatry, the chief "revolters" from My holy religion, lay deep designs to ensnare men's lives; though I by My Prophets and judgments have not forborne to utter vehement rebukes against them all. W. Lowth, Bp. Hall.

3. I know Ephraim,] I know him and his doings. W. Lowth. It is not very material to determine, whether Ephraim is here taken more strictly for the one tribe; or in greater latitude for the whole ten tribes, thus denoting the same as Israel: in which case the naming of both is only a repetition of the same thing in different words for the sake of emphasis. Dr. Pocock.

5. And the pride of Israel doth testify to his face:] Their proud carriage, boldness, and insolence against God, and in their idolatrous courses, witnesseth "to their face" against them; that is, makes their wickedness and ill deserts openly known, and declares how worthy they are of punishment. Dr. Pocock.

—— therefore shall Israel and Ephraim fall in their iniquity; &c.] The ten tribes, as distinguished from Judah, "shall fall" into the punishment due to them, miseries and calamities, "in their iniquity;" that is, for, or by reason of, their iniquity. And "Judah also shall fall with them;" Judah also, being partakers with them in their idolatry and other wickedness, shall partake with them in the like punishment. Sin shall have the like effect in both. Dr. Pocock.

6. They shall go with their flocks and with their herds to seek the Lord;] They shall at length offer sacrifices to Him in vain. Abp. Newcome. The prophecy looks forward to the times of Hezekiah and Josiah; declaring, that the attempts of those pious kings to restore the true worship will fail of any durable effect, and will not avail to reverse the doom pronounced upon the guilty people. Bp. Horsley.

They stopped their ears obstinately against Him, when He called on them, and proffered mercy in the day of mercy; He will now stop His ear against them, when they cry for it in the day of judgment. Dr. Pocock.

7. They have dealt treacherously against the Lord:] The Hebrew verb properly signifies the infidelity of a wife to her husband. W. Lowth.

—— they have begotten strange children:] That is, children trained from their earliest infancy in the habits and principles of idolatry, and growing up aliens with respect to God, ("for all are not Israel which are of Israel,") alienated from Jehovah in their affections; and in their way of thinking, in their sentiments, and practices, mere heathen. Bp. Horsley.

—— now shall a month devour them with their portions.] A very short time shall complete their destruction. "With their portions;" that is, their allotments. They shall be totally dispossessed of their country; and the boundaries of the separate allotments of the several tribes shall be confounded. Bp. Horsley.

8. Blow ye the cornet in Gibeah, &c.] Some suppose Gibeah and Ramah to have been two cities, not far distant from each other, situated in the lot of Benjamin, on the confines of both kingdoms: others suppose Gibeah to have been the bound of the kingdom of Judah, and Ramah that of the kingdom of Israel. According to the latter supposition, the alarm was to be sounded, that it might be taken by the people of both kingdoms: according to the former, that it might give notice to the places in the lot of Benjamin, and so to the kingdom of Judah, that the enemy were already come upon Israel, and were now so near, that the people of Judah also had reason to look to themselves. Dr. Pocock.

—— after thee, O Benjamin.] The sense must be supplied by the enemy, or some such thing: The enemy is just behind thee. The conciseness and abruptness of the speech more effectually calls for attention in the person to whom it is addressed:

Before CHRIST about 780.

9 Ephraim shall be desolate in the day of rebuke: among the tribes of Israel have I made known that which shall surely be.

10 The princes of Judah were like them that remove the bound: therefore I will pour out my wrath upon them like water.

[a] 1 Cor. 15. 4.

Behind thee, O Benjamin; look to thyself without more delay, beware, danger is at thy back, the enemy at thy heels. Dr. Pocock.

10. The princes of Judah were like them that remove the bound:] Literally, "the landmark;" concerning which crime, see Deut. xix. 14; and for the curse annexed to it, and its heinousness in God's sight, Deut. xxvii. 17. By the phrase in this place, "like them that remove the bound," we may understand that the princes of Judah put away, and passed over, all bounds prescribed to them both by the law of God, and by the laws of men. Dr. Pocock.

11. Ephraim is oppressed and broken in judgment,] He is "oppressed" with a heavy weight of calamity: he is crushed in his judicial contest with Me. Abp. Newcome.

—— because he willingly walked after the commandment.] This is commonly explained of Jeroboam's command to his subjects, of forsaking the worship of the true God; which command they readily complied with. Of the same kind "were the statutes of Omri," mentioned by Micah, chap. vi. 16. W. Lowth. God permitted or ordered those evils, which they suffered to befall them, because they willingly and obstinately forsook His commandments, to follow commandments contrary to His. Dr. Pocock.

12. — as a moth, — as rottenness.] The Hebrew word, rendered "a moth," means a worm, that breeds in clothes, and eats them: that rendered "rottenness," or "a worm," in the margin, means a worm, that breeds in wood, when it is old and rotten; or, as some think, rottenness itself. Dr. Pocock. The sense is, that God would, from small and unperceived beginnings, work a slow, but certain and complete destruction. Bp. Horsley.

13. — and sent to king Jareb:] It is probable, as commentators in general agree, that Judah is understood here before the verb "sent:" the sense seems to require it, as Judah is expressed before, in mentioning the evils that they felt, and after, ver. 14, in mentioning what should befall them. The person, to whom he sent, is uncertain: our translators shew that they thought the original capable of different interpretations, by rendering it "king Jareb" in the text, and "the king of Jareb," and "the king that should plead," in the margin. Dr. Pocock.

Jareb was either the name of an Assyrian king, or of an Assyrian city: see chap. x. 6. Abp. Newcome. Or, the phrase describes some powerful monarch, "the king, who takes up all quarrels," as it may be translated; that is, a king, who took upon him to interfere in all quarrels between inferiour powers, to arbitrate between them, and compel them to make up their differences upon such terms as he thought proper to dictate; whose alliance was of course anxiously courted by weaker states. Such was the Assyrian monarch in the times, to which this prophecy relates. His friendship was purchased by Menahem, king of Israel, 2 Kings xv. 19, 20; and in a later period solicited by Ahaz, chap. xvi. 5—9. Bp. Horsley.

—— yet could he not heal you, &c.] We have here the usual scriptural change of persons from "them" to "you." For an illustration of the facts alluded to, see the history, 2 Chron. xxviii. 16—20. Dr. Pocock.

15. I will go and return to my place,] The sense is, that Jehovah will withdraw the tokens of His presence from the Jewish temple. Bp. Horsley.

—— till they acknowledge their offence,] This is a proof of what God elsewhere declares, "that He hath no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way, and live." God withdraws Himself from His people, not that He would finally reject them, but that they might know their wickedness and folly in rejecting and forsaking Him, and so "acknowledge their offence, and seek His face." Dr. Pocock.

Chap. VI. The three first verses of this chapter should be joined to the preceding. The Prophet speaks in his own person to the end of the third verse. He takes occasion, from the intimation of final pardon to the penitent, given in the conclusion of God's awful denunciation of judgment, to address his countrymen in words of mild pathetick persuasion. Bp. Horsley.

Ver. 2. After two days — we shall live in his sight.] There appears in this place a very plain allusion to Christ lying dead in the grave for two days, and on the third rising again to life. The reference in the margin shews this to have been the opinion of our translators. Dr. Pocock.

Jehovah, who had departed, will return, and again exhibit the signs of His presence among His chosen people. So the Jews, converted and restored, will "live in His sight," or in His presence, and attain the true knowledge of God, which they never had before. The "two days" and the "third day" seem to denote three distinct periods of the Jewish people. The first day is the captivity of the ten tribes by the Assyrians, and of the two under the Babylonians, considered as one judgment upon the nation; beginning with the captivity of the ten, and completed in that of the two. The second day is the whole period of the present condition of the Jews, beginning with the dispersion of the nation by the Romans. The third day is the period yet to come, beginning with their conversion and restoration. This I take to be the sense of the prophecy, in immediate application to the Jews. Nevertheless, whoever is well acquainted with the allegorical style of prophecy, when he recollects, that our Saviour's sufferings were instead of the sufferings and death of sinners; that we are baptized into His death; and, by baptism into His death, are buried with Him; and that He, rising on the third day, raised us to the hope of life and immortality; will easily perceive no very obscure, though but an oblique, allusion to our Lord's resurrection on the third day; since every believer may speak of our Lord's death and resurrection, as a common death and resurrection of all believers. Bp. Horsley.

3. — his going forth is prepared as the morning;] His appearance, as our Deliverer, is fixed as the return of the morning: we shall be restored by Him from our calamities, as certainly as the rising of the sun chases away darkness. Abp. Newcome.

—— and he shall come unto us as the rain, &c.] See Deut. xi. 14. The periodical rains being looked upon as necessary causes of great blessings, other things also, which produced blessings in other kinds, whether temporal or spiritual, are often compared to such rains. See Deut. xxxii. 2; Ps. lxxii. 6; Prov. xvi. 15; Isai. lv. 10, &c. Dr. Pocock.

4. O Ephraim, what shall I do unto thee?] Here Jehovah takes up the discourse again in His own person. Bp. Horsley. God declares that the true cause of the impending evils was not any defect of mercy or providence in Him, who had used all probable means for bringing the people home to Himself, but was to be found in their own inveterate wickedness. If at any time, desiring to be relieved from some affliction, they made a shew of reformation, their goodness was not real, sincere, and permanent, but it soon failed: they were quickly weary of it, and returned to their evil ways. Dr. Pocock.

5. Therefore have I hewed them by the prophets; &c.] It is agreeable to the language of Scripture, to represent the Prophets of God as doing that, which they foretold should be certainly done. Dr. Pocock. See Jer. i. 10, and the note there.

—— and thy judgments are as the light that goeth forth.] God having admonished, reproved, and threatened the people, in order to recall them, but without effect, they cannot accuse Him of cruelty in inflicting the judgments which He threatens: such judgments are evidently deserved; their justice is as clear as the sun, "as the light that goeth forth;" as manifest as that is to all. Dr. Pocock.

6. For I desired mercy, and not sacrifice;] That is, rather than sacrifice: I am better pleased with true goodness, than with the exactest observance of the external duties of religion, unless they proceed from a sincere principle of obedience; see Mic. vi. 6—8. The Jews are accustomed to express comparisons by negatives, or rejecting the things less worthy. Compare Joel ii. 13, and John vi. 27. W. Lowth. The parallel line clearly shews that by "not sacrifice" is to be understood in preference to sacrifice. Abp. Newcome.

The words appear to anticipate an answer of the people, that they were not so unworthy as they were accused of being, since they were constant in offering all sorts of sacrifice to God; but God replies, that sacrifices were not all that was required of them, for that He delighted not in such things for themselves, but only in respect to other things, which by them were testified, and with which they ought to be accompanied. That sacrifices, when rightly offered, were acceptable to Him, appears from His numerous precepts concerning them in the law. Dr. Pocock.

—— the knowledge of God] Not an inactive speculative knowledge, but such knowledge as testifies itself by the keeping of God's commandments. By "mercy" may be understood all the duties of the second table; and by "the knowledge of God" all those of the first. Dr. Pocock. This is the general rule, comprehending the sum of all the practical precepts of the Prophets. Bp. Horsley.

7. But they like men have transgressed the covenant:] Either "like men" in general, whose quality it is to be false and treacherous in observing covenants; which aggravates the accusation, that they, God's peculiar people, should be as regardless of their plighted faith, as other nations, that were strangers to Him and aliens from His covenant: or, "like Adam," as in the margin. Dr. Pocock.

—— there have they dealt treacherously against me.] "There," in the covenant; that is, in that matter wherein they ought to have been especially faithful. Dr. Pocock.

8. Gilead is a city of them that work iniquity,] Gilead, or Ramoth Gilead, was a city of refuge, Deut. iv. 43; and such also was Sichem, Josh. xx. 7: both therefore inhabited by priests and Levites. The Prophet means to represent the priests as seducers of the people to that idolatry, which proved the ruin of the nation. Bp. Horsley.

9. — murder in the way by consent:] That is, they associate themselves for murdering such as fall in their way, as troops of robbers lay wait for any passenger to spoil him. One of the marginal readings, "with one shoulder," imports the same thing, namely, "by consent," like men putting their shoulders together to move some great weight. But if the other reading in the margin, "in the way to Shechem," be taken, it describes the place where such murders and outrages were committed by those idolatrous priests and their associates from Gilead. Dr. Pocock. See the foregoing note.

11. Also, O Judah, he hath set an harvest for thee,] Also, O Judah, corrupted Israel hath prepared a harvest of revenge for thee, in sowing the seeds of idolatry in thee. Bp. Hall. "When I returned the captivity of My people:" or, more plainly, "When, or whereas, I would have turned away the captivity of My people;" that is, I would upon their repentance have averted My judgments, which will end in their captivity. *W. the like; then their wickedness farther appeared, in that they would not hearken to His word, nor be amended, but more obstinately persisted in their evil courses. Israel, Ephraim, and Samaria, design altogether, as either of them might do singly, the whole body, consisting of both prince and people. Dr. Pocock.

3. They make the king glad with their wickedness, &c.] They study to please their kings and great men, by complying with the idolatry which they have set up. W. Lowth. "Their lies" mean their perfidies towards God, in deserting His service for idolatry. Bp. Horsley.

4. They are all adulterers, &c.] They are as much inflamed with lust, "as an oven heated," or over-heated, "by the baker, who (therefore) ceaseth from raising" or making any more fire, "after he hath kneaded the dough, until it be leavened." Dr. Wells.

5. In the day of our king &c.] On the king's birth-day, or his coronation-day, or some other solemn festival kept in his honour, the great men gave themselves to immoderate drinking, enticing their king to do the same, till he so far forgot himself, as to give the hand of fellowship to vain persons. Dr. Pocock. Those, who in their cups made a jest of the true religion, and derided the denunciations of God's Prophets, he distinguished with the most familiar marks of his royal favour. Bp. Horsley. Some recent and notorious act of contempt to God, or to His Prophets, or to publick justice, appears here to be alluded to. Abp. Newcome.

6. For they have made ready their heart like an oven, &c.] As an oven conceals the lighted fire all the night, while the baker takes his rest, and in the morning vomits forth its blazing flame; so all manner of concupiscence is brooding mischief in their hearts, while the ruling faculties of reason and conscience are lulled asleep, and their wicked designs wait only for a fair occasion to break forth. Bp. Horsley.

7. They are all hot as an oven, &c.] "All," that is, the whole body of the people. Of this general corruption the pernicious effects are such as concern, not only private persons, but the publick welfare, to the disturbance of all order and government, which must necessarily result from the destruction and untimely end of the "judges:" by which some understand the inferiour magistrates, others the kings, who are presently more particularly mentioned. Dr. Pocock.

——all their kings are fallen:] The prophecy looks forward to the fall of the six last kings in uninterrupted succession, Zachariah, Shallum, Menahem, Pekahiah, Pekah, Hoshea. Bp. Horsley.

8. Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people; &c.] For Ephraim, he hath mixed himself with heathens, and is a professed associate with them: Ephraim is grown irresolute in his religion; like a cake that is half dough, and half baked; so is he, half Israelite, half Pagan. Bp. Hall. One thing on one side, another on the other. Burnt to a coal at bottom; raw dough at the top. An apt image of a character that is all inconsistencies. Bp. Horsley.

——a cake not turned.] All along the Black sea, from the Mæotic lake to the Caspian sea, in Chaldea, and in Mesopotamia, except in towns, the people often make their bread about an inch thick: this they lay on a corner of the hearth, and cover it with hot embers and ashes: in a quarter of an hour they turn it. Bp. Pocock.

9. Strangers have devoured his strength,] Such nations, as either violently assaulted or spoiled him, or such as he applied to for help: as the Assyrians, chap. v. 13; and in this chapter, ver. 11, the Egyptians, Assyrians, and others. These "devoured his strength," his wealth, his riches, and treasure; the flower also of his men, and the fruits of his land. Dr. Pocock. Yet all these afflictions do not make him sensible of the disastrous state of his affairs, and that the hand of God is against him. W. Lowth.

——gray hairs] The tokens of decay of natural strength, and of tendency to dissolution. Dr. Pocock.

11. Ephraim also is like a silly dove without heart:] That is, "without understanding:" see Jer. v. 21. As "a silly dove," affrighted at her nest, flies to one place and to another for security, and there often falls into some net or snare, and meets with greater danger than she would have found at home; so Ephraim, being troubled with the great evils which he felt or feared at home, forsook God and His protection, and called on Egypt and Assyria for help, but instead of it met with greater injury. Dr. Pocock.

12.——I will chastise them, as their congregation hath heard.] As they have heard their punishments declared in the prophetical denunciations in the books of Moses, which were read in their synagogues every sabbath day. Bp. Horsley.

13.——though I have redeemed them, yet they have spoken lies against me.] Though I have redeemed them out of Egypt, (see Mic. vi. 4,) and afforded them many other signal deliverances, yet they have not given Me the glory, but have represented Me by their golden calf, and have "changed My truth into a lie," Rom. i. 25. W. Lowth. See the note on ver. 3.

14. And they have not cried unto me with their heart, &c.] Though they have made shew of some great repentance and humiliation, howling and crying upon the beds of their distress, yet they have not with their hearts unfeignedly sought unto Me. Bp. Hall. Even when they assembled themselves for fear of dearth and famine, to pray for plenty, for corn and wine, even then did they continue to rebel against God. Dr. Pocock.

15. Though I have bound and strengthened their arms, &c.] Though I have bound up their wounds, and given them new strength and vigour, yet they are continually devising some new idolatrous invention, whereby they may dishonour Me. W. Lowth. Or, as in the margin, "though I have chastened," &c. Whether I have inflicted punishment on them, or shewed them favour, they rejected Me for their idols. Abp. Newcome.

16. They return, but not to the most High:] A distinction is here made between a true and a false, or hypocritical conversion. It is not said that they returned not at all, that they made no shew of repentance; but that they returned not home to the Lord; which is what He requires of true converts: "If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the Lord, return unto Me," Jer. iv. 1. This is well given notice of by our translators, in supplying the word "but," which is not in the original, "They return, but not to the most High." Dr. Pocock.

—— they are like a deceitful bow:] Like an ill-contrived bow, which never directs the arrow to the mark. W. Lowth. Their intentions, which are pretended to be directed to God, are indeed carried quite another way. Dr. Pocock.

—— this shall be their derision in the land of Egypt.] Their blasphemies, and other enormities, shall be a just cause of reproach to them, when they are exiles in Egypt, whither many of them fled, or were carried away captive. See chap. ix. 3, 6. Compare chap. viii. 13; and see the note on Ezek. xxxvi. 20. W. Lowth.

Chap. VIII. ver. 1. Set the trumpet to thy mouth.] This is a manifest allusion to the custom of calling the people together by this means. It is not necessary to suppose, that the Prophet was really to sound a trumpet, but rather that he should call upon the people with all possible earnestness and vehemence. Compare Isai. lviii. 1. Dr. Pocock. Call the people to war: the Assyrian enemy shall come, like an eagle, against the professed Church of God, the people of Israel. Bp. Hall.

2. Israel shall cry unto me, My God, we know thee.] Israel shall feignedly cry unto Me, and challenge favour from Me; and say, My God, we make profession of Thy name. Bp. Hall.

3. Israel hath cast off the thing that is good:] Either God Himself, who is simply and absolutely "good;" Matt. xix. 17: or such things as are pleasing to God, and therefore "good" as bringing men near to Him, such as His law, His worship, the performance of their duty to Him, and the observance of His ways and commandments. Dr. Pocock.

4. They have set up kings, but not by me: &c.] In the description of those things, which provoked God to inflict His judgments upon Israel, He declares their apostasy from Him, first in civil matters, then in matters of their religion. Dr. Pocock.

—— princes, and I knew it not:] That is, God did not own or approve of what they did. Dr. Pocock.

5. Thy calf, O Samaria, hath cast thee off;] The calf or idol, that the Israelites worshipped, is said to cast them off, inasmuch as it was of no avail to them. Dr. Pocock, Dr. Wells.

6. For from Israel was it also:] This, their calf and calf-worship, is, as all other idols and idolatry, of mere human invention, framed by the Israelites, according to the thoughts of their own hearts, and the device of their own heads; and not agreeable to the will and command of God. Dr. Pocock.

7. For they have sown the wind, &c.] And as for them, they shall even reap as they have sown; they have sown the wind, and they shall reap a whirlwind; they have trusted to vanity, and they shall receive loss and disappointment: a famine shall come upon them: the grain that they have sown, shall yield no stalk; or, if it have a stalk, yet that stalk shall yield no ear; or if an ear, yet that ear shall yield no substance of meal; or, if it do yield any, the strangers, their enemies, shall swallow it up. Bp. Hall.

8. Israel is swallowed up:] Though they be not brought to utter destruction and annihilation, yet they shall be so "swallowed up," as it were, by other nations, among whom they shall be dispersed, that they shall retain neither the condition, nor the name of Israel, as the people of God, or a people at all of their own jurisdiction. This hath been long since plainly verified in the ten tribes, which have been for so many years so lost among the Gentile nations, that even the very name of them is perished, and no one can say where they are. Dr. Pocock.

—— as a vessel wherein is no pleasure.] As broken vessels that are put to base uses. Bp. Hall.

from what God had denounced against them. Dr. Pocock. This is not yet the going into captivity. The captivity, though near at hand, is yet to come. This going up is past. It is a voluntary going up, and a crime. The captivity is the punishment. Bp. Horsley.

—— a wild ass alone by himself:] See the note on Job xi. 12. With respect to the expression "alone by himself," it may be observed, that though wild asses be often found in the desert in whole herds, yet it is usual for some one of them to break away, and separate himself from his company, and run alone at random by himself. Dr. Pocock. See also the note on Job xxxix. 6.

—— Ephraim hath hired lovers.] This alludes to the general profusion of the government in forming foreign alliances, in which the latter kings, both of Israel and Judah, were equally culpable; as appears by the history of the collateral reigns of Ahaz and Pekah. Their allies are called "lovers;" for every forbidden alliance with idolaters was a part of the spiritual incontinence of the nation. Bp. Horsley. Nothing could be more flagitious, than that the hire should be given by the adulteress. See Ezek. xvi. 33. Abp. Newcome.

10. Yea, though they have hired &c.] Though they have hired allies among the heathen nations, now will I gather them, in order to deliver them into captivity, and they shall sorrow in a little time for the burden of captivity, &c. put on them by the king of Assyria. "A little" in this place should be "in a little time." The king of Assyria is styled "the king of princes," as having kings and princes for his tributaries. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth.

11. Because Ephraim hath made many altars to sin, altars shall be unto him to sin.] Or a punishment for his sin. He shall fall from one degree of wickedness and idolatry to another; and his sin shall bring with it its own punishment. W. Lowth.

12. I have written to him the great things of my law, &c.] I have given unto them My royal law, and have left it recorded for them, that it might be to them a perpetual direction; but they have slighted it, as if it were a thing that concerned them not. Bp. Hall.

13. They sacrifice flesh &c.] Though, pretending to worship God, they offered many sacrifices, yet they offered them with evil intentions, namely, to glut and feast themselves, but not appease or please Him: and therefore it is added, "the Lord accepteth them not." Dr. Pocock.

—— they shall return to Egypt.] Or, be reduced to an abject oppressed condition, like that of the Egyptian servitude. Bp. Horsley.

14. For Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and buildeth temples; &c.] For Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and, contrary to His commandment, buildeth temples to idols: and Judah, contrary to the command of the same God, hath multiplied fenced cities, as trusting in his own strength: but I will send the Assyrian, as a fire, upon the cities of Israel, and the Chaldean into the cities of Judah, and they shall consume and waste the palaces thereof. Bp. Hall.

Chap. IX. ver. 1. Rejoice not, O Israel, for joy,] It should seem that this prophecy was delivered at a time when the situation of publick affairs was promising: perhaps after some signal success, which had given occasion to publick rejoicings. Bp. Horsley. Or, the joy here mentioned may properly mean those rejoicings, commonly made among all people at the end of harvest, when the Gentiles offered sacrifices of thanksgiving for the plenty they enjoyed. W. Lowth.

—— as other people:] Those national successes, which might be just cause for rejoicing to other people, are none to thee: for thou liest under the heavy sentence of God's wrath for thy disloyalty to Him; and all thy bright prospects will vanish, and terminate in thy destruction. The Gentiles were not guilty in an equal degree with the Israelites; for although they sinned, it was not against the light of Revelation, in contempt of the warnings of inspired Prophets, or in breach of any express covenant. Bp. Horsley.

—— thou hast loved a reward upon every cornfloor.] Meaning, that they considered the good things, which they received, as "a reward" for the service which they paid to their false gods. Dr. Pocock.

2. The floor and the winepress shall not feed them, &c.] The Prophet here tells them, they might think they had obtained their "reward." For their crops were indeed abundant; nevertheless they would not be the better for the plenty of their land. Bp. Horsley.

3. — the Lord's land;] The land, which the Lord sware to their fathers to give them, Deut. xxx. 20; and which He did accordingly give them, still reserving the ownership of it to Himself. See Lev. xxv. 23. Dr. Pocock.

—— Ephraim shall return to Egypt, &c.] This returning of theirs into Egypt seems to be the flight of several of them thither, to avoid the destruction brought by the Assyrians upon their nation, when the rest were either slain, or carried captives from "the Lord's land" into Assyria and other countries, where they were "wanderers among the nations," ver. 17. Dr. Pocock.

—— and they shall eat unclean things in Assyria.] Their circumstances in captivity shall not permit them to observe the rules of the law relating to unclean meats, and they will be forced to eat of such meats as have been offered to idols. Compare Dan. i. 8; Ezek. iv. 13. W. Lowth.

4. They shall not offer wine offerings &c.] A more particular explanation of that threatening denounced, chap. iii. 4, that they should be "without a sacrifice:" they should have no opportunity in their captivity to offer meat offerings or drink offerings to God, as they did upon the high places, or in their idolatrous temples; see Amos iv. 4, 5: and sometimes, perhaps, in the temple at Jerusalem; see ver. 15. They themselves shall be in the condition of mourners for the dead, and by that means be unqualified to offer any thing to God; nor will their offerings be acceptable: see Deut. xxvi. 14. W. Lowth.

—— the bread of mourners;] See the note on Jer. xvi. 7.

—— for their bread for their soul shall not come into the house of the Lord.] Either they shall not offer in the house of the Lord oblations for making atonement or expiation for their souls: or by "bread for their soul" may be understood such as is necessary for preserving and keeping them alive; and then the meaning is, their bread shall be for their eating, but shall not come into the house of the Lord. Dr. Pocock.

5. What will ye do in the solemn day, &c.] Ye shall have no opportunity of observing any of your solemn feasts in your captivity: see chap. ii. 11. W. Lowth.

6. For, lo, they are gone &c.] They shall flee into Egypt, hoping there to find refuge and safety from destruction: but they shall die there; "Egypt shall gather them up," for burial, as the words appear to be explained in the following, "Memphis shall bury them." Memphis, or Moph in the Hebrew, was a chief city or metropolis of Egypt, called Noph in Isaiah, chap. xix. 13; Jer. ii. 16; Ezek. xxx. 13, &c. Some suppose it to be the place now called Cairo. For the sense here given to "gather," see Jer. viii. 2; Ezek. xxix. 5. Dr. Pocock. The Arabs call Cairo Menoph at this day. Abp. Newcome.

—— the pleasant places for their silver,] The closets or cabinets, where they were wont to hide their treasures and jewels. Bp. Hall. The general sense of this passage is very clear. It describes the extreme devastation of the country by the Assyrian conquest, under the image of weeds growing up in the dwellings, deserted by their owners, and stripped of their costly and elegant furniture of silver. Bp. Horsley.

7. — the prophet is a fool, the spiritual man is mad,] The days are at hand which shall make the Israelites sensible, that not a word of God shall want its effect, and that His Prophets were true Prophets, but their false prophets, to whom the Israelites hearkened, were indeed "fools" and "madmen." And this should come to pass "for the multitude of their iniquity," whereby they shewed themselves to "hate" God, and made themselves hateful to Him. Dr. Pocock.

8. The watchman of Ephraim was with my God: &c.] The Prophet, whom God sent to them, such as Hosea himself, or any other formerly sent, and by them rejected, was "with God;" a true Prophet of His, and faithful in the discharge of His commission. Dr. Pocock. The true Prophet, like a watchman sent by God, gave warning to Israel of their approaching calamities: see Jer. vi. 17; Ezek. iii. 17; xxxiii. 2; Micah vii. 4. But the words of the false prophet are like "a snare" laid on purpose to entrap men into mischief and destruction. See chap. v. 1. And his false prophecies he utters purely out of "hatred" to God and His worship, and to deter those that hearkened to him from attending upon God's service at the temple. W. Lowth.

9. — as in the days of Gibeah:] The men of Gibeah are described in the same characters as those of Sodom are; compare Judges xix. 22, with Gen. xix. 4: to which they added the villany of forcing the Levite's concubine, Judges xix. 25. W. Lowth.

10. I found Israel like grapes in the wilderness; &c.] Israel was no less pleasing to Me at the first, than ripe grapes would be to a thirsty traveller in a dry wilderness: I esteemed your forefathers, those fruitful Patriarchs, as the most choice and firstripe figs; but their sinful progeny fell off and degenerated to idolatry, applying themselves to that shameful idol; and chose to themselves several abominable deities, according as they were effected to the parties that worshipped them. Bp. Hall.

"The wilderness" is rightly connected with "grapes," and is not to be connected with "Israel." Bp. Horsley.

—— as the firstripe] The early figs are very desirable, and much esteemed in those countries. See Jer. xxiv. 2; Isai. xxviii. 4. Dr. Pocock.

—— unto that shame;] See the note on Jer. iii. 24.

11. As for Ephraim, their glory shall fly away &c.] Barrenness is threatened with peculiar propriety, as the judgment for the worship of the idol here mentioned. Bp. Horsley.

13. Ephraim, as I saw Tyrus, is planted in a pleasant place:] The situation of Ephraim, and particularly of the royal city of Samaria, situate in that tribe, is as pleasant as that of Tyre: see Ezek. xxvii. 3. W. Lowth.

wombs and dry breasts; that they may never bring forth or nourish up children to idolatry or slaughter. Bp. Hall.

15. All their wickedness is in Gilgal:] These words may seem a reply from God to the Prophet's petition; shewing that His decreed judgments should not in any degree be taken off from them, by reason of their unworthiness and great provocations. Dr. Pocock.

—— for there I hated them:] Rather, "therefore there I hated them;" He hated them there, because they sinned there: or "surely there I hated them." The word "there" is emphatical. In that very place, where heretofore I shewed them such tokens of My love and gracious presence, even there I have since hated them, or now hate them. Dr. Pocock.

Gilgal was the place where the armies of Israel, upon their entering Canaan, first encamped; where Joshua set up the twelve stones, taken by God's command out of the midst of Jordan, in memorial of the miraculous passage through the river. There the first passover was kept, and the fruits of the promised land first enjoyed. There the captain of the host of Jehovah appeared to Joshua. There the rite of circumcision, which had been omitted during the forty years of the wandering of the people in the wilderness, was renewed. And, in the days of the Prophet Samuel, Gilgal appears to have been an approved place of worship and burnt offering. But in latter times, it appears from Hosea and his contemporary Amos, that it became a place of great resort for idolatrous purposes. And these are the wickednesses in Gilgal, of which the Prophet here speaks. Bp. Horsley.

16. — yet will I slay &c.] The scope of these words is to set forth the diminution of Israel, as to their glory, number, strength, and power, by a firm decree from God. This is according to the curse, anciently denounced against them in the law, that, if they should become disobedient, and walk contrary to Him, then He would make them "be left few in number," Lev. xxvi. 22; Deut. iv. 27; xxviii. 62. Dr. Pocock.

17. My God] As if He were only the God of the Prophet, who clave to Him, not of the people, who had by their disobedience departed from Him. Dr. Pocock.

—— and they shall be wanderers among the nations.] And so they became, and so they continue to this day, "wandering among the nations," so as scarce to be found out, having no settled place of their own, no where that they can be called a people, or are as such acknowledged. Dr. Pocock. See the notes on Deut. xxviii. 64, 65, 67.

Chap. X. ver. 1. Israel is an empty vine, &c.] Israel is a vine indeed, but a fruitless one; or, if he bear fruit, it is to himself, for the advancing of his own profit and pleasure; as his wealth and abundance increaseth, so doth his idolatry; look how much he is pampered with his store, so much more doth he spend upon his goodly images. Bp. Hall.

The fruit here spoken of is not the fruit of good works, but the fruit of national prosperity; increasing population, abundant crops, numerous flocks and herds, publick opulence, military strength. Bp. Horsley.

2. Their heart is divided;] Between God and their idols: pretending to worship God, but not cleaving in sincerity to Him, nor giving Him their whole heart: "halting between" Him and Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 21. Dr. Pocock.

3. For now they shall say, We have no king, &c.] It shall shortly come to pass, that the enemy prevailing against them and their king, as despairing men, rather than true penitents, they shall be constrained to say, "We have no king," or are as if we had none, none that can save us, he being taken and not able to defend himself; see ver. 7, and 2 Kings xvii. 4: and deservedly is this happened unto us, "because we feared not the Lord;" we have forsaken Him, and made Him our enemy, and "what" good "then shall a king do to us?" Dr. Pocock.

4. They have spoken words,] Evil words; (Dr. Pocock:) empty words. Abp. Newcome. What follows may be understood as taxing them generally with "swearing falsely;" such as swearing by false gods; or binding themselves to something needless, impossible, or unlawful; or breaking the promises which they had ratified by oaths. Dr. Pocock.

—— thus judgment springeth up &c.] In consequence of their carelessness about their covenants, as a punishment of their fraudulent dealings, the "judgment" of God falls upon them as severe and bitter as "hemlock." Dr. Pocock.

5. The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear &c.] Samaria here signifies the kingdom of Israel, of which Samaria was the capital city. See chap. viii. 5, 6. The inhabitants of that kingdom shall be seized with fear and confusion, when the calf of Beth-el (see Jer. iv. 15.) shall be carried away as a present to Shalmaneser, ver. 6: when he made the king and kingdom tributary, 2 Kings xvii. 3. W. Lowth.

—— because of the calves of Beth-aven:] There is little doubt but the same is here meant as "the calf of Samaria," chap. viii. 5, 6. Dr. Pocock. The plural number is used, because the calf of Beth-el (here called Beth-aven, as having become the temple of an idol) was in its size, and the riches of the temple, the principal image. The word therefore may be rendered, "the great calf." Bp. Horsley.

of the Eastern people, as also of the Romans, to carry away the gods of conquered countries. Abp. Newcome.

7. As for Samaria, her king is cut off &c.] The king spoken of is with reason generally understood to have been Hoshea, the son of Elah, under whom and with whom Samaria was destroyed; see 2 Kings xvii. Dr. Pocock.

8. The high places also of Aven,] That is, of Beth-aven, ver. 5, and chap. iv. 15; or Beth-el; which, being by reason of the great wickedness there committed, so unworthy of its first name, "the house of God," is in contempt first called "the house of iniquity," and now "iniquity" itself in the abstract: this being the signification of "Aven." Dr. Pocock.

—— and they shall say to the mountains, Cover us; &c.] The inhabitants shall be so terrified with the sword of the enemy, that they shall wish themselves under ground, and speak to the hills and mountains to fall upon them, and shelter them from that fury. Bp. Hall. This sublime description of fear and distress our Lord had in view, Luke xxiii. 30; which may be a reference and not a quotation. Abp. Newcome.

9. O Israel, thou hast sinned from the days of Gibeah:] See chap. ix. 9. Some render it "more than in the days of Gibeah." W. Lowth. The sin of Israel now exceeds the sins of those sinful times, when "every man did what was right in his own eyes," and it seemed right in the eyes of the whole tribe of Benjamin to protect the outrage of the Sodomites of Gibeah. See Judges xix. Bp. Horsley.

—— there they stood:] "There," that is, upon that occasion; namely, the quarrel with the tribe of Benjamin, on account of the outrage of the men of Gibeah. "They stood," that is, the Israelites set themselves in array for the attack. Bp. Horsley.

—— the battle in Gibeah against the children of iniquity did not overtake them.] Notwithstanding some losses, small in comparison with that of the tribe of Benjamin, which was all but cut off, God gave the Israelites success in that righteous war. Bp. Horsley.

10. It is in my desire that I should chastise them;] Though God had hitherto spared them, and they thereon grew insolent and secure, yet He now declares His determinate purpose of punishing them, and shews by what means and where or why He would do so. Dr. Pocock.

—— when they shall bind themselves in their two furrows.] The Greek translation gives a plainer and easier sense, according to the reading in the margin, "When I shall bind them," as it were, hand and foot, to deliver them into the hands of the Assyrians, who "shall be gathered against them," "for their two transgressions;" namely, the calves of Dan and Beth-el. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth.

11. And Ephraim is as an heifer that is taught, &c.] The sense would run easier if we read it, Ephraim is as an heifer that is teachable. So I passed over her fair neck: I caused Ephraim to ride; Judah did plow, and Jacob did break the clods. God here sets forth the gentle and easy methods He used to bring both Israel and Judah to a sense of their duty; treating them with gentleness, as a husbandman does young bullocks or horses, stroking them, and encouraging them, till they are accustomed to the yoke: then He gave them His laws, and prescribed them rules for the several duties and offices of life, and expected they should bring forth fruit answerable to the several helps and advantages which He had given them. W. Lowth.

—— I will make Ephraim to ride;] Rather, I rode upon Ephraim, after the manner of husbandmen, who are used to ride upon their bullocks. Grotius.

12. Sow to yourselves in righteousness,] He proceeds in the same figure of language, expressing in terms belonging to common husbandry such duties as were required of them in their spiritual husbandry, or service of God. The people, who were before compared to an heifer, are here spoken to, as the husbandman, the sower, and reaper. We may understand, as introductory to this verse, some such words as, And I said, Sow &c. Dr. Pocock.

—— reap in mercy;] This is a promise, that if they did "sow in righteousness," they should "reap in mercy;" that is, they should experience that measure of mercy, whereby God above their desert rewards those, who sincerely endeavour to do His commandments. Dr. Pocock. The whole verse may be thus paraphrased: Give yourselves to all holy and conscientious endeavours: sow to yourselves in holiness and righteousness, and reap mercy and lovingkindness from the Lord; break up the fallow grounds of your hearts by a true and serious repentance; for it is time for you to turn to the Lord, and to seek to recover His favour; so far, as that He may rain upon you the showers of His grace and mercy, whereby ye may appear righteous in His sight. Bp. Hall.

13. Ye have plowed wickedness, ye have reaped iniquity;] In the former verse he shewed, what God commanded them to do: here, in the like figurative expressions, he shews what they had done. Dr. Pocock. But alas, contrary to My commandments, ye have ploughed up deep furrows of wickedness, and have reaped a large crop of iniquity. Bp. Hall. As your thoughts and designs have been evil, such has been the fruit and reward of your labours: compare chap. viii. 7. And "ye have eaten the fruit of lies:" ye have received the just reward of your idolatries. See the note on chap. vii. 3. W. Lowth.

14. — as Shalman spoiled Beth-arbel] The allusion is to a military exploit, not elsewhere recorded or mentioned in Scripture, but doubtless well known in Hosea's time; in which some powerful conqueror prosecuted his victory with extreme cruelty, and spared neither sex nor age. The Israelites are threatened with a like calamity. Dr. Pocock, Bp. Horsley.

do to the people, what they suffered, because their idolatry and great wickedness there moved God to bring the destroyer against them. Dr. Pocock.

—— in a morning shall the king of Israel utterly be cut off.] Suddenly shall Hoshea be deprived of his kingdom, and an end put to the whole state and government of Israel. See Ps. xlvi. 5; xc. 14; cxliii. 8; Jer. vii. 13; xxxv. 15. W. Lowth.

Chap. XI. ver. 1. When Israel was a child, then I loved him,] When the people was in the state of childhood; that is, in the patriarchal times, and during their continuance under the Egyptian bondage. W. Lowth.

—— and called my son out of Egypt.] Israel is called God's "son," and His "firstborn," Exod. iv. 22, 23; and therein was an eminent figure of the Messias, in whom all God's promises are fulfilled. This prophecy is applied by St. Matthew, chap. ii. 15, to our Lord's return out of Egypt, after His flight thither in His infancy: and the literal sense of the words does more properly belong to Him, than to Israel; which is observable in many other prophecies, which can but improperly be applied to those, of whom they were spoken; and, taking them in their true sense, are only fulfilled in Christ. See particularly Ps. xxii. 16, 18. W. Lowth.

2. As they called them, &c.] The more earnestly the Prophets called on them to cleave steadfastly to the true God, ver. 7, the more they were bent to depart from Him to the worship of idols. W. Lowth.

3. I taught Ephraim also to go,] See Deut. i. 31; viii. 2. W. Lowth.

—— but they knew not that I healed them.] They considered not that the health and safety they enjoyed was bestowed by Me. W. Lowth.

4. I drew them with cords of a man,] That is, such cords as are proper to draw men with, as they are men, endued with reason, to discern between good and evil, and with freedom of will to choose the one before the other; and with such a temper and agreement of both, that what we apprehend to be good, that we freely choose, and refuse what we think to be evil. Accordingly God sets before us good and evil, and both in such a light that we may clearly discern the difference between them, and choose the good before the evil. Thus He draws us with cords, suitable to man's constitution: in explanation He adds, "with bands of love," or with expressions of His love and kindness towards us. In this way one man commonly draws another: how much more can Almighty God do it, who hath the hearts of all men in His hand, and the greatest favours to bestow which man can possibly desire? This is the meaning of the Apostle, "that the goodness of God leadeth us to repentance," Rom. ii. 4. It doth not force or drag us, but it leads us to repentance, and so to Christ. Bp. Beveridge. Not violently forcing them into His service, but striving to win them over with gentle invitations, and great favours and benefits, such as usually most powerfully work on reasonable men, and bind them to their benefactor. Dr. Pocock.

—— take off the yoke] Or, "lift up," as in the margin. The expression of "lifting up" the yoke refers, as is well observed by Abp. Newcome, and before him by Bishop Lowth on Isaiah, chap. i. 3, to the custom of raising the yoke forward, to cool the neck of the labouring beast. Bp. Horsley.

5. He shall not return into the land of Egypt,] They were desirous of making their escape thither, and many families perhaps effected it: see chap. ix. 6. But here it is threatened, that the nation in a body should not be permitted so to escape, because they refused to return to God. Bp. Horsley.

6.—his branches,] That is, his people. Dr. Wells.

8. How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? &c.] God's mercies are here pathetically described as contending with His justice, to shew that He does not willingly afflict or grieve the children of men, Lam. iii. 33. W. Lowth.

When nothing will do, with what difficulty and reluctance does God deliver up His people into the hands of their enemies? "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim?" &c. What a conflict is here! What tenderness and yearning of His bowels towards them! He cannot find in His heart to give them up, till He is forced to it by the last necessity. Abp. Tillotson.

—— mine heart is turned within me, &c.] These words would seem to import a change of mind and purpose in any but God, whose counsels man's words cannot duly express, nor his understanding fully comprehend. Dr. Pocock.

9. I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger,] I do not give way to a blind rage, as men often do: but as God, am unchangeable, and will still fulfil My gracious promises made to Abraham and his people, of being their God. Compare Mal. iii. 6. W. Lowth.

—— I will not return to destroy] When I come a second time, it will not be to destroy. An indirect promise of coming again, not for judgment, but for mercy. Bp. Horsley.

—— and I will not enter into the city.] A second time, in order to make an utter destruction. W. Lowth, Dr. Wells.

10. They shall walk after the Lord:] They shall follow God's call, and comply with His commands, when He shall convert them by an efficacious call of His providence, or powerful preaching of the Gospel. W. Lowth. These words may be understood as a prophecy of the conversion of the remainder of Israel to Christ, and the settling of them in a spiritual kingdom: which prophecy has been already in great measure made good, by the calling in of many of them at Christ's first coming, and the preaching of the Gospel; and is still fulfilling, and to be fulfilled, till His second coming, by the conversion of as many of them as the Lord shall call in the interval between His two comings. Near his second coming it is a received opinion, that there shall be a signal conversion of them. Dr. Pocock.

—— he shall roar like a lion:] "He," that is, Christ, "the Lion of the tribe of Juda," Rev. v. 5. The same, whom it is said that "they shall walk after;" that is to say, Jehovah, the LORD, the true and essential God. Dr. Pocock. The roaring is unquestionably the sound of the Gospel; and that sound was to begin to be uttered by the voice of the incarnate God Himself. Bp. Horsley.

—— then the children shall tremble from the west.] At this efficacious call of God, His children shall come in haste from the several places of their dispersion, and particularly from the western parts of the world, see Zech. viii. 7, called "the sea" in the original, and expressed in Isaiah by "the islands of the sea:" see Isai. xi. 11; xxiv. 14. W. Lowth. "The children" mean primarily and more immediately the Israelites in dispersion abroad out of their own country, Deut. xiv. 1; and together with them such of the Gentiles, as with them should be called by "the roaring of the lion," the preaching of the Gospel, to the partaking of the common faith and salvation. Dr. Pocock. It is impossible to render in English the full force of the original word, which we translate "tremble." It expresses the rapid motion of birds in the air upon fluttering pinion. Bp. Horsley.

11. They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, &c.] The Israelites were dispersed, as into other remote parts denoted by "the west," or "the sea," so also into Egypt, whither divers of them betook themselves, and into Assyria, whither they were carried captives. By the naming of these places may be well understood all other countries where any of them should be: from whence it is here promised that they should make speed to come in unto God in their due time. Dr. Pocock.

—— and I will place them in their houses,] As doves naturally resort to the houses they are used to, see Isai. lx. 8, so shall these return and settle in their own native country; see Ezek. xxviii. 25. W. Lowth. Or, instead of regarding these words as a promise of bringing the Jews back to their own land, it may be better to look upon them as promising spiritual good things under expressions taken from temporal: so that by "placing them in their houses" may be meant the bringing them into the Church, and there putting them in a sure and settled state; a state of quiet and security like that of a person fixed in his own house. Dr. Pocock.

12. Ephraim compasseth me about with lies, &c.] In the mean time, Ephraim makes a profession of My name, but false and counterfeit: and the house of Israel serves Me, but in hypocrisy. Bp. Hall.

—— but Judah yet ruleth with God, &c.] But Judah still orders his kingdom in God's appointed way, retaining kings of the lineage of David, and preserving a lawful priesthood; and by so doing is "faithful with the saints," that is, with his holy forefathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and with his other progenitors and holy men; or, as in the margin, is "faithful with the Most Holy," still adhering to the worship of God. Dr. Pocock.

Chap. XII. ver. 1. Ephraim feedeth on wind, &c.] A proverbial expression to signify labour in vain, or pursuing such measures as will bring damage rather than benefit. W. Lowth.

—— lies and desolation;] Multiplying his falsehood, he multiplies the causes of his own destruction. Bp. Horsley.

—— oil is carried into Egypt.] They project how to make themselves strong by their leagues with the Assyrians; and they send of their most precious presents to insinuate with the Egyptians. Bp. Hall.

3. He took his brother by the heel &c.] From the mention of Jacob in the foregoing verse, the Prophet takes occasion to put his posterity in mind of the particular favours God had bestowed upon his posterity for his sake. His taking his brother by the heel in the womb, denoted, that he obtained the right of the firstborn, and deprived his brother of it. W. Lowth.

The taking of his brother by the heel, is not mentioned in disparagement of the Patriarch. On the contrary, the whole of these two verses is a commemoration of God's kindness for the ancestor of the Israelites, on which the Prophet founds an animated exhortation to them, to turn to that God, from whom they might expect so much favour. This favour of God for Jacob displayed itself when he was less than an infant; for before he was born he took his brother by the heel; and, in his adult vigour, he was endued with such strength, as to prevail against an angel. Bp. Horsley.

4. —there he spake with us;] That is, God spake with us in the loins of Jacob. The things spoken certainly concerned Jacob's posterity, as much as, or more than, himself. Bp. Horsley.

5. —the Lord is his memorial.] That is, God's memorial: His appropriate, perpetual, incommunicable name, expressing His essence. Bp. Horsley. See Exod. iii. 15.

6. Therefore turn thou to thy God: &c.] Thou therefore, O Israel, encouraged by the memory of God's love for thy progenitor, and by the example which thou hadst in Him, of the efficacy of weeping and supplication, turn to thy God in penitence and prayer, and in the works of righteousness; and ever, under all circumstances, and at all times, look out for His mercy and aid, and be not weary with expectation of His coming. *Bp. 7. He is a merchant,] Or, as it is in the margin, according to all the ancient versions, except the Chaldee, "He is Canaan." God says to the Prophet, Instead of turning to Me, and keeping to works of mercy and justice, he is a mere heathen huckster. Thou hast miscalled him "Jacob." He is "Canaan." Not Jacob, the godly, the heir of the promise. But Canaan, the cheat, the son of the curse. There is an ambiguity in the original, where the word is both a proper name, and an appellative signifying a merchant. Bp. Horsley, Dr. Pocock.

8. And Ephraim said, Yet I am become rich, &c.] These words declare the strange pride and insolence of Ephraim, refusing to forsake their evil ways, but pleasing and applauding themselves in them, as having been found by experience good and profitable. Dr. Pocock.

—— iniquity — that were sin.] According to a Jewish commentator, the Hebrew word for "iniquity" denotes something more grievous than that for "sin;" so that the sense may be, They shall find in me neither great iniquity, nor so much as any light ordinary sin. Or the word for "that" may be rendered by and or or. Dr. Pocock.

9. And I that am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt &c.] I, who brought thee out from Egypt, and have still continued My favours towards thee, will in aftertimes return thy captivity. W. Lowth.

The words may be understood, not of a temporal deliverance, commemorated by feast and times of rejoicing, particularly that of tabernacles; but of deliverance from spiritual bondage by Christ, and of admission into the Church of Christ. Dr. Pocock. Concerning the feast of tabernacles, see the notes on Lev. xxiii. 40; Nehem. viii. 17, 18.

10. — and used similitudes, by the ministry of the prophets.] Commanding the Prophets to perform symbolical actions; as, in the case of Isaiah, going naked; Jeremiah, binding himself; Ezekiel, lying on one side; not mourning for his wife; Hosea's marriage; and many other instances. Bp. Horsley.

11. Is there iniquity in Gilead? &c.] The tribes settled about Gilead, beyond Jordan, were already captivated by Tiglath-pileser. God by the Prophet declares, that idolatry, still practised in Gilgal, was equally abominable, and would bring down similar judgments upon the remaining tribes, on the west of Jordan. Bp. Horsley.

—— as heaps in the furrows of the fields.] As frequent every where as clods in the furrows of the fields. Bp. Hall. Their altars stand so thick that they are as discernible as stones gathered up and laid in heaps in the fields. W. Lowth.

12, 13. And Jacob fled into the country of Syria, &c.] So opposite to thine was the conduct of thy father Jacob, that he fled into Syria to avoid an alliance with any of the idolatrous families of Canaan; and, in firm reliance on God's promises, submitted to the greatest hardships. And, in reward of his faith, God did such great things for his posterity, bringing them out of the land of Egypt, and leading them through the wilderness like sheep, by the hand of His servant Moses. Bp. Horsley.

14. Ephraim provoked him to anger &c.] Notwithstanding all My favours, shewn to these people and their ancestors, they have highly provoked Me by their idolatries and other sins. Therefore shall their wickedness be the cause of their destruction; and as they have reproached and dishonoured God by word and deed, God shall, as a just recompense, make them a reproach and byword among the heathen. See chap. vii. 6; Deut. xxviii. 37: compare Dan. xi. 18. W. Lowth.

Chap. XIII. ver. 1. When Ephraim spake trembling, &c.] While Ephraim behaved himself humbly towards God, as his father Jacob, with weeping and supplication, chap. xii. 4, he was in great power, authority, and dignity in Israel: but when he offended, by proudly forsaking God, and worshipping that shameful idol Baal, he lost his former pre-eminence, and grew contemptible: his strength immediately declined, and gave manifest symptoms of ruin and destruction. Dr. Pocock, W. Lowth. He was consigned to destruction from his enemies. Abp. Newcome.

2. — kiss the calves.] That is, worship the calves. Among the ancient idolaters, to kiss the idol was an act of the most solemn adoration. Thus we read of "all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him." Tully mentions a brasen statue at Agrigentum, in which the workmanship of the mouth was visibly worn by the frequent kisses of the worshippers. And in allusion to this rite, the holy Psalmist, calling upon the apostate faction to avert the wrath of the incarnate God, by full acknowledgment of His Divinity, bids them "kiss the Son," that is, worship Him. Bp. Horsley.

4. Yet I am the Lord thy God &c.] In thy distress thou betookest thyself to other gods, expecting relief from them; but thou shalt find, that none will be able to save thee but Myself, whenever thou wilt sincerely turn to Me: compare chap. xii. 9; Isai. xliii. 11. This and the following verse are an introduction to the gracious promises that follow, ver. 9—14; and chap. xiv; and import, that God will never utterly forget the promises made to their fathers. See Rom. xi. 29. W. Lowth.

6. — therefore have they forgotten me.] "Therefore," for that very reason. My kindness itself was the occasion of their ingratitude; for, in the pride of heart, which the miraculous supply of their wants for so long a time produced in them, they forgot their Benefactor. Bp. Horsley.

11. I gave thee a king in mine anger,] When the Israelites desired to have a king, they forgot that they had a king already; the Lord of all the earth condescending to be in a peculiar manner their immediate Sovereign. Their petition for a king was in contempt of that sovereignty of God; and this was the circumstance, by which they incurred God's displeasure in that petition. I would observe, that the seven verses of this chapter, from the fifth to the eleventh inclusively, form a section which regards the whole race of Israel in general. At the twelfth verse the prophecy turns again on Ephraim in particular. Bp. Horsley.

— I gave thee a king in mine anger, and took him away in my wrath.] Or, "will take him away." I complied with your request in giving you a king Saul, though I was justly displeased at it: see 1 Sam. viii. 7; x. 19. And of later times I have suffered you to set up new kings, after you had murdered their predecessors; see chap. viii. 4: and now I will take away your present king Hoshea, and at the same time put an end to your kingdom and nation. W. Lowth.

12. The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up; his sin is hid.] Usually such things as are bound up or tied together, and hid or laid up in some safe or secret place, are not neglected or forgotten, but laid aside in order that they may be forthcoming and produced, when occasion shall require. God therefore, in these terms expressing His dealing with Ephraim as to their sins, manifestly declares, that though His judgments do not immediately seize them, yet their iniquity is not forgotten by Him, but will in due time be brought to light and punished. The expressions may be illustrated by Deut. xxxii. 34, 35; Job xiv. 17. Dr. Pocock.

13. — he is an unwise son; for he should not stay long &c.] The old translation renders it more plainly; "Else he would not stand still like a stillborn child." As a child, if it could be supposed to have understanding, would deliver itself out of the straits of the womb, and not tarry there to the manifest danger of itself and the mother; compare 2 Kings xix. 3: so if Ephraim or Israel had acted wisely, they would have prevented their approaching destruction by a speedy reformation. W. Lowth.

14. I will ransom them from the power of the grave; &c.] If we apply this to Ephraim or the Israelites, spoken of before, it may signify, Though they be in never so hopeless and desperate a condition, God will in due time deliver them out of it. See the like expressions, Ps. lvi. 13; lxxi. 20; lxxxvi. 13. W. Lowth.

But the words are rather to be understood as promising new and extraordinary benefits, obtained and conferred by our Saviour Jesus Christ, and not limited either to Jews or Israelites, but together with them reached forth to all sorts of men. Dr. Pocock.

—— the grave;] Or "hell," as the Hebrew word also signifies. "The grave" is the common receptacle of the bodies of the dead: and by "ransoming from the power of the grave" is meant, a freeing of the bodies of those who are ransomed in due time from the grave by a joyful resurrection. Dr. Pocock. But it should be rendered "hell," for the Hebrew word for the grave is different, and the two names are never confounded by the sacred writers. No two things indeed can be more distinct. By "hell" is meant in this passage, not the place where the damned are to suffer their torment, but the invisible place, where the departed souls of the deceased remain, till the appointed time shall come for the reunion of soul and body. This is the "hell" of the Old Testament; though, by an abuse of the word, the place of torment is the first notion it presents to the English reader. But the English word "hell" properly imports no more than the invisible or hidden place, from the Saxon word "helan," to cover over: (see the note from Parkhurst on Job xxvi. 5, 6.) In the New Testament, we find the word "hell" in our English Bibles in twenty-one passages in all. In nine of these it signifies a place of torment; namely, in these: Matt. v. 22, 29, 30; x. 28; xviii. 9; xxiii. 15, 33; Mark ix. 47; Luke xii. 5. In the other twelve, simply the region of departed spirits. And in the same sense it is to be taken in the Apostles' Creed, "He descended into hell:" of this place we know little, except that to those, who die in the Lord, it is a place of comfort and rest; not a paradise of eternal sleep and senselessness, but a place of happy rest and tranquil hope. In the prophetick imagery it is often mentioned as a dark cave deep in the bowels of the earth. Sometimes it is personified, as in this passage. Bp. Horsley.

—— O death, I will be thy plagues; &c.] The Apostle's triumphant exclamation in the passage referred to in the margin is an indirect allusion to this text of Hosea. Bp. Horsley.

—— repentance shall be hid from mine eyes.] That is, God will never repent of His determination of ransoming and redeeming them; He will certainly make it good. Dr. Pocock.

as the case stands with Ephraim, though he be fruitful among his brethren, yet I will fetch the Assyrian upon him, &c. Bp. Hall. The word "Ephraim" denotes fruitfulness; see Gen. xli. 52. This tribe answered his name, being the most numerous and potent of all the ten tribes. W. Lowth.

The frequent and sudden transitions from threatening to promise, from indignation to pathetick persuasion, and the contrary, produce much obscurity in the latter part of this Prophet; which however disappears, when breaks are made in the proper places. In the thirteenth verse, the peril of Ephraim's situation, arising from his own hardened thoughtlessness, is described in the most striking images. In the fourteenth, God the Saviour comforts him with the promise of the final deliverance and salvation. In this verse is introduced a new threatening, with which the chapter ends. Bp. Horsley.

—— he shall spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels.] "He;" either Jehovah, or the conqueror represented under the image of the wind. "All pleasant vessels;" every article of ornamental furniture, of costly materials and exquisite workmanship. Bp. Horsley.

If sin be not followed by repentance, and a thorough renunciation of all former lusts, habits, and customs, it will be visited with a destruction, like that of Samaria, which is here foretold, and about four years after was fulfilled. Our Saviour has made the application on another like occasion, and we ought all to lay it to heart, that "except we repent, we shall all likewise perish." Wogan.

Chap. XIV. Having denounced in the foregoing chapters heavy judgments against Israel for their idolatry and other sins, the Prophet now shows that the only way to prevent or escape the judgments of God is by repentance, which he earnestly exhorts them to take. Dr. Pocock.

Ver. 1. O Israel,] The whole family of Israel, in both its branches, is addressed. Bp. Horsley.

2. Take with you words,] That is, a set form of supplication. That set forms were in use among the Jews in the earliest ages, upon all solemn occasions, is evident from various passages of Holy Writ. Bp. Horsley, Dr. Pocock.

—— so will we render the calves of our lips.] The meaning is, We will, instead of offering sacrifices, render the confession of our lips. Dr. Pocock. "Lips" are here put for praises and thanksgivings uttered by the lips. This kind of figure, which puts the cause or instrument for the effect, is very frequent with the sacred writers. Bp. Horsley.

3. Asshur shall not save us; &c.] The first part of the people's repentance is described as consisting in a reliance solely upon God's protection, and not putting any trust in human strength: and then in renouncing all idolatrous worship. The Israelites had formerly made an alliance with the Assyrians; see chap. v. 13; viii. 9; xii. 1: and they are often upbraided by the Prophets for their courting foreign alliances, and particularly strengthening themselves with horses from Egypt or Assyria. See Isai. xxx. 16; xxxvi. 8; 2 Chron. xvi. 7. W. Lowth.

——for in thee the fatherless findeth mercy.] God is often said to take especial care of "the fatherless." He gives particular command "not to afflict any fatherless child," Exod. xxii. 22; He doth "execute the judgment of the fatherless," Deut. x. 18; He is therefore styled "the helper of the fatherless," Ps. x. 14; and "a Father" to them, Ps. lxviii. 5; and it is delivered as an expression of exceeding great anger towards the people, that "He will not have mercy on their fatherless," Isai. ix. 17. The Israelites therefore, being now in such a condition, as may be well signified by the appellation of "fatherless," are taught to take with them in their address to God that name, of great efficacy in moving Him to mercy, and even, as it were, challenging it as a privilege. Dr. Pocock.

4. I will heal their backsliding, &c.] God's gracious answer to the professions of repentance; assuring them of His being reconciled to them, and, as a token of it, freeing them from their sins and the consequent punishment due to them; compare chap. xi. 7: and embracing them with a true love and affection, without any remembrance of their former provocations. W. Lowth.

If all the Israelites had turned to the Lord their God at the preaching of the Gospel, and believed in His Christ, they would have found this promise made good to them all. As many of them, as were converted to Him, enjoyed the benefit of it, where or however they were dispersed; and doubtless shall still do so, as many as shall at any time come in to Him, wheresoever they remain. Dr. Pocock.

5. I will be as the dew unto Israel: &c.] I will be comfortable and refreshing unto Israel, even as the dew is to the summer grass: so that he shall grow up in beauty as the lily, and in strength and height as the cedar in Lebanon. Bp. Hall. Most interpreters understand Lebanon to be here figuratively taken for the forests growing on it. Dr. Pocock.

—— as the lily,] After the first rains in the autumn, the fields about Aleppo every where throw out the autumnal lily daffodil; and the few plants, which had stood the summer, now grow with fresh vigour. Dr. Russell.

6. — his smell as Lebanon.] The mountain is celebrated by travellers for the fragrance of the greens, that clothe its sides. Maundrell found the great rupture, "which runs at least seven hours travel directly up to the sea, and is on both sides exceeding steep and high, clothed with fragrant greens from the top to the bottom." Bp. Horsley.

7. They that dwell under his shadow shall return;] Most interpreters translate the sentence thus: They shall return, and

Before CHRIST about 725.

‖ grow as the vine: the ‖ scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon.

8 Ephraim shall say, what have I to do any more with idols? I have heard him, and observed him: I am like a green fir tree. From me is thy fruit found.

‖ Or, blossom.

9 Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them? for the ways of the LORD are right, and the just shall walk in them: but the transgressors shall fall therein.

dwell under His shadow: that is, they shall return into their own country, and rest safely under the shadow or protection of the Almighty. Compare Ps. xci. 1; and see the note on chap. i. 11. W. Lowth. Or the words are more properly a description of the happy and prosperous condition, which shall be enjoyed by those who dwell under the shadow of the Church, the Israel of God. Dr. Pocock.

—— as the wine of Lebanon.] The Phenician wines in general were esteemed by the ancients, especially those of Tripolis, Tyre, and Berytus, places at the foot of Lebanon, or very near it: and the wines of that country still preserve their character. Niebuhr says, "The wine of mount Lebanon, long since celebrated by the Prophet Hosea, is still excellent." Bp. Horsley.

8. Ephraim shall say, What have I to do &c.] This verse contains the prophecy of a dialogue between God and Ephraim, or Israel His people, after their conversion. They begin with declaring their utter aversion to idolatry; see ver. 3. To which God graciously replies, that He has "heard" them confessing their sins, and expressing their abhorrence of them, (compare Jer. xxxi. 18,) and that He will "observe" them, that is, will guide them with the eye of His providence and mercy. W. Lowth.

—— I am like a green fir tree.] I shall be to thee as a tall and shady fir tree; and, whatsoever fruit thou yieldest, it shall be of My giving. Bp. Hall.

9.—for the ways of the Lord are right,] That is, His commandments. The just shall walk safely by obeying them; the transgressors shall fall, by virtue of the same commandments, in consequence of their transgression. Grotius.

J O E L.

INTRODUCTION.

THERE is little doubt that Joel lived in the reigns of Uzziah king of Judah, and of Jeroboam II. king of Israel, who flourished as contemporary sovereigns between the years of the world 3194 and 3219; and that he delivered his prophecies soon after Hosea had commenced his ministry; though some Jewish and Christian writers have assigned to him a later period; some placing him in the reign of Jotham; others in that of Joram; and others contending that he prophesied under Manasseh, or Josiah; the last of which monarchs began to reign about 640 years before the birth of Christ.

Joel was the son of Pethuel, or Bethuel, and, according to some reports, of the tribe of Reuben. He is related to have been born at Bethoron; which was probably the lower or nether Bethoron, a town in the territory of Benjamin, between Jerusalem and Cesarea. Of the particulars of his life, or of the age to which he attained, we have no account. Dorotheus relates only, that he died in peace at the place of his nativity.

The Book appears to be entirely prophetick; though Joel, under the impression of foreseen calamities, describes their effects as present, and by an animated representation anticipates the scenes of misery which lowered over Judea, chap. i. 4—7, 10, 16—20. Though it cannot be positively determined to what period the description contained in the first chapter may apply, it is generally supposed that the Prophet blends two subjects of affliction in one general consideration or beautiful allegory; and that under the devastation to be produced by locusts in the vegetable world, he pourtrays some more distant calamities to be produced by the armies of the Chaldeans in their invasion of Judea.

In the second chapter the Prophet proceeds to a more general denunciation of God's vengeance; which is delivered with such force and aggravation of circumstance, as to be in some measure descriptive of that final judgment, which every temporal dispensation of the Deity must faintly prefigure. The severe declarations of Joel are intermingled with exhortations to repentance, and to the auxiliary means of promoting its effects, fasting and prayer; as also with promises of deliverance, and of a prosperity predictive of evangelical blessings.

In consideration of these important prophecies, we need not wonder that the Jews should have looked up to Joel with particular reverence, or that he should be cited as a Prophet by the evangelical writers; chap. ii. 32, compared with Rom. x. 13; Acts ii. 16—21. Dr. Gray.

In his style Joel is peculiarly elegant, perspicuous, diffuse, and fluent; he is also in a high degree sublime, bold, and animated. In his first and second chapters he shews how well prophetical poetry succeeds in description; how greatly it delights in metaphors, comparisons, and allegories. Nor is the arrangement of his subjects less beautiful than the colouring of his language: the amplification of calamities; exhortation to repentance; the promise to the penitent of earthly as well as heavenly blessings; the restoration of the Israelitish prosperity; the punishments inflicted on their adversaries. However, both in this and in other places, when we extol perspicuity of elocution, and beauty of composition, we do not deny that there is sometimes great obscurity in the matter: which may occasionally be observed in the conclusion of this prophecy. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. I. ver. 2. Hear this, ye old men, &c.] The Prophet declares the unexampled severity of the present judgment, by appealing to the memory of the ancients, and the observation of the present generation, whether they ever knew or heard of any thing like it, so that it deserved to be recorded as a warning to aftertimes. Compare chap. ii. 2. W. Lowth.

4. — the palmerworm — the locust — the cankerworm — the caterpiller] Four kinds of noxious creatures are here described, the Hebrew names of which appear to be derived from their destructive qualities. It is uncertain what names they ought to bear in our own, and other European languages. Our translators have very well rendered them by the names of such known creatures, as concur in hurting and devouring the fruits of the earth, so that whatever escapes one, is destroyed by another. Dr. Pocock.

5. Awake, ye drunkards,] It may seem probable, that the sin of drunkenness was then among others much indulged in, and

‖ Or, ashamed.

11 Be ye ashamed, O ye husbandmen; howl, O ye vinedressers, for the wheat and for the barley; because the harvest of the field is perished.

12 The vine is dried up, and the fig tree languisheth; the pomegranate tree, the palm tree also, and the apple tree, even all the trees of the field, are withered: because joy is withered away from the sons of men.

13 Gird yourselves, and lament, ye priests: howl, ye ministers of the altar: come, lie all night in sackcloth, ye ministers of my God: for the meat offering and the drink offering is withholden from the house of your God.

† Heb. grains.

18 How do the beasts groan! the herds of cattle are perplexed, because they have no pasture; yea, the flocks of sheep are made desolate.

‖ Or, habitations.

20 The beasts of the field cry also unto thee: for the rivers of waters are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness.

CHAP. II.

1 He sheweth unto Zion the terribleness of God's judgment. 12 He exhorteth to repentance, 15 prescribeth a fast, 18 promiseth a blessing thereon. 21 He comforteth Zion with present, 28 and future blessings.

---

rendered the people sottish and stupid, as drunkards usually are, so that they regarded neither the work of the Lord, nor their own good. To them therefore He appears more particularly to address Himself, as having by that odious sin drawn down the present judgment on themselves and their country. The word "awake" is used to denote the drunkard's insensibility to his danger in Prov. xxiii. 35; and elsewhere it signifies a man's recovery from security in other sins: Rom. xiii. 11; Eph. v. 14. Dr. Pocock.

6. — a nation] Locusts, poetically so called. Abp. Newcome. As the Prophet applies the term, "a nation," to the locusts, and Solomon calls the ants "a people," Prov. xxx. 25, so Homer has "the nations of swarming bees," and "the numerous nations of swarming flies;" and Orpheus expressly mentions "an innumerable nation of locusts." Parkhurst.

—— is come up] A future event, which might be averted by repentance, chap. ii. 12, &c. is spoken of as having already taken place, to enliven the description by setting the images before the eyes of the reader. Abp. Newcome.

—— whose teeth are the teeth of a lion,] The same comparison is used in Rev. ix. 8; and denotes the great power of doing mischief possessed by these little vermin. Elsewhere, things which have great force to do hurt, are compared to the teeth of a lion, Ecclus. xxi. 2; Ps. lviii. 6. Dr. Pocock.

7. He hath laid my vine waste, &c.] See the notes on Exod. x. 4, 15.

—— the branches thereof are made white.] By reason of the bark being eaten from the boughs. Bp. Hall.

8. Lament like a virgin &c.] The words are an apostrophe to the land of Judea: the Prophet puts her in mind that she ought to be deeply affected with the sore strokes of the Divine vengeance, and express her inward sense of those calamities with the same outward expressions of mourning, as a young virgin that was betrothed to an husband would lament his untimely loss. "The husband of her youth," is a woman's first husband; as the "wife of his youth," Mal. ii. 15, is a husband's first wife. W. Lowth.

9. The meat offering &c.] The earth yieldeth not so much as wherewith to make a meat offering or drink offering unto the Lord; the corn and the wine and the oil are utterly consumed; so that the priests, the Lord's ministers, have just cause to mourn. So also verses 10—13. Bp. Hall.

14. Sanctify ye a fast, &c.] In order to deprecate God's wrath, and avert His judgments. See chap. ii. 15, 16. W. Lowth. The word "sanctify" seems to require, how the people were to prepare themselves for the enjoined fast, and to behave themselves in it; namely, with more than ordinary sanctity and holiness, not thinking it sufficient only to abstain from meat and drink, which is sufficient to denominate a man to fast, but withal to abstain from sin and wickedness, which is requisite to a holy and religious fast, such as is the duty and sign of an humble penitent, and is alone acceptable to God. Dr. Pocock.

—— into the house of the Lord your God,] See 1 Kings viii. 37. W. Lowth.

17. — the barns are broken down;] The receptacles for the fruits of the earth are not repaired, because there is nothing to treasure up in them. Abp. Newcome.

19. — for the fire hath devoured the pastures &c.] For the scorching drought hath devoured all the herbage of the wilderness, and the fiery beams have burnt up all the trees of the field. Bp. Hall. The wilderness is sometimes opposed to the hills or mountains, and then it signifies the plains, and places for pasture. See Isai. lxiii. 13; Jer. ix. 10. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 800.

BLOW ye the ‖ trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the LORD cometh, for it is nigh at hand;

‖ Or, cornet.

2 A day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains: a great people and a strong; there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years †of many generations.

† Heb. of generation and generation.

3 A fire devoureth before them; and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them.

4 The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses; and as horsemen, so shall they run.

Before CHRIST about 800.

5 Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle array.

6 Before their face the people shall be much pained: all faces shall gather †blackness.

Chap. II. ver. 1. Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, &c.] The Prophet describes the locusts and caterpillers as God's "army," ver. 11; in pursuance of which metaphor he exhorts the people to prepare to meet them, in the same terms as if they were alarmed to encounter an enemy, which was by sounding a trumpet. See Jer. iv. 5, 6, 19. This ceremony was not only used to give notice of an approaching enemy, but likewise to publish the times of the solemn assemblies for the worship of God: see Numb. x. 3, 9, 10. And this is the chief use they were to make of it upon this occasion; see ver. 15. For there was no other way to avert the impending judgment, but humbling themselves before God with fasting and prayer. W. Lowth.

—— the day of the Lord] A day, in which He will send very terrible judgments on the land, and take vengeance on them for their sins. Dr. Pocock.

2. A day of darkness] A very calamitous day, bringing with it much mischief and distress, which are figuratively set forth by darkness, as a state of prosperity is by light. See Amos v. 18, &c. By some interpreters "darkness" here is understood properly for darkness in the air, caused by what should then befall them in their land. Compare Exod. x. 15. Dr. Pocock. See on that passage the note from Dr. Shaw, whose testimony concerning locusts "darkening the sun" is confirmed by various authors, ancient and modern.

—— as the morning spread upon the mountains:] As a morning cloud spread upon the mountains, which hides the sun and the heavens, and threatens the certain coming of showers. Dr. Pocock.

—— a great people and a strong;] The Prophet speaks of the locusts in such military terms, and represents them like such a formidable army, that it has induced several learned men to think, that they are put by a figure to denote real armies. Another opinion is, that we are to understand the locust, canker-worm, palmerworm, and caterpiller, spoken of ver. 4. of the preceding chapter, in a literal sense; and that the military terms, which are used, may by the authority of parallel passages in Scripture be applied to them. Reading.

—— there hath not been ever the like, &c.] See Exod. x. 14. In both places we are to take it for a proverbial expression, to set forth the extraordinary greatness of the judgment. Compare 2 Kings xviii. 5; xxiii. 25. W. Lowth.

3. A fire devoureth before them; &c.] They consume like a general conflagration, as Pliny says, "burning things up by their touch." Sir Hans Sloane, in his Natural History of Jamaica, says, "They destroy the ground not only for the time, but burn trees for two years after:" and Ludolphus, in the History of Ethiopia, "Wheresoever they feed, their leavings seem as it were parched with fire." Abp. Newcome.

—— as the garden of Eden] A proverbial expression for a place of pleasure and fruitfulness, as we commonly use the word paradise. See Gen. xiii. 10; Isai. li. 3. W. Lowth.

—— nothing shall escape them.] That is, nothing which the ground produces. Abp. Newcome. Different authors give accounts similar to Dr. Shaw's in the note on Exod. x. 15, concerning the devastation occasioned by locusts among all sorts of vegetable productions, not only herbage, corn, pulse, the fruits and leaves, the buds and very bark of trees, but even the hemp, notwithstanding its great bitterness, and the reeds with which the African huts are thatched.

5. Like the noise of chariots &c.] See Rev. ix. 9; Nahum iii. 2. Bochart says, that a swarm of locusts make so loud a noise, when they move, that they may be heard six miles off. Abp. Newcome.

—— like the noise of a flame of fire &c.] The noise in the former comparison seems to be made by their motion; this is probably meant of the noise made by their chewing or eating. Dr. Pocock.

Cyril, quoted by Bochart, says of them, that while they are breaking their food with their teeth, the noise is like that of flame driven about by the wind. Abp. Newcome.

Dr. Chandler, in his Travels in Asia Minor, takes notice of the prodigious crackling and noise which accompanied an accidental fire, which was kindled in the long parched grass near Troas, and devoured all before it. Parkhurst.

6. — all faces shall gather blackness.] The alteration in the countenance was to indicate the inward pain. Dr. Pocock. Compare Jer. viii. 21; Nahum ii. 10. W. Lowth.

7. They shall run like mighty men; &c.] They shall march in such a swift and orderly manner, that no place shall be inaccessible to them, nor any force be able to withstand them. W. Lowth.

8. Neither shall one thrust another;] Many writers mention the order of locusts in their flight and march; and their manner of proceeding directly forwards, whatever obstacles were interposed. Abp. Newcome. See Dr. Shaw's note on Exod. x. 15.

—— and when they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded.] This refers to the scales with which locusts are covered as with a coat of mail. Abp. Newcome.

9. They shall run to and fro in the city; &c.] Compare Exod. x. 5, 6. St. Jerome saith of locusts, that there is nothing inaccessible to them; they seize, not only on the fields, corn, and trees, but also enter cities, houses, and the most private chambers. Dr. Pocock.

lowing clause express great consternation and calamity. The two other clauses may well have a literal sense; see the note on ver. 2: or they may denote, in a strong Eastern manner, devastation spread through a whole country. Abp. Newcome.

11. And the Lord shall utter his voice before his army:] Like a leader or general, He shall command or encourage this His army, and can make the meanest parts of the creation the instruments of His vengeance. God's voice sometimes denotes His anger: the most terrible way of declaring His will is when He speaks to us by His judgments. Compare chap. iii. 16; Amos i. 2; Jer. xxv. 30. The time of God's particular judgments, as well as that of His general one, is commonly expressed by the "day of the Lord," the former being an earnest and imperfect representation of the latter. W. Lowth.

12. Therefore also now, saith the Lord, &c.] The sins of the people were the cause, which merited this dreadful visitation: and the way to remove it was for the people to repent of their sins, by open confession and acknowledgment of them, by a deep humiliation and sorrow for them, and by utterly renouncing and forsaking them. This is the great reason of the Prophet's discourse, and the main point which he pursues throughout it. Reading.

—— turn ye even to me with all your heart,] Let not your heart be divided between God and your idols or other sins, but let it be given wholly up to Him. God requires in our love and service of Him, that it be "with all our heart, with all our soul, and with all our might," Deut. vi. 5; "and with all our mind," as our Saviour adds in repeating that first and great commandment, without obeying which no other can be duly observed, Mark xii. 30. Without being actuated by the heart, all performances of the outward man are insufficient and vain, or rather they are displeasing. But when the heart shall have duly performed its part, the outward man is not left unconcerned, but hath his part also to perform, in order to express how the inward man of the heart is really affected: and so by the joint concurrence of both true conversion or repentance is made up. The Prophet therefore to the inward affection of the whole heart adds those outward acts, which are to accompany and express it, "fasting, and weeping, and mourning." Dr. Pocock.

He that would so turn to the Lord, as to find mercy with Him, must not turn from one sin to another, or from one sect to another, or from one religion to another only; but he must turn from all his sins, from all his former wicked ways and unrighteous thoughts, and must "turn unto the Lord with all his heart:" that is, our hearts must be wholly inclined to God, and our souls be offered up as a whole burnt offering unto Him, without any mental reservation or hypocritical equivocation. There is no agreement between Christ and Belial, between God and sin in the same heart. Bp. Beveridge.

13. And rend your heart, and not your garments,] Not merely your garments. See Gen. xxxvii. 29, 34; Job i. 20; 2 Sam. i. 11.

—— repenteth him of the evil.] See the notes on Gen. vi. 6.

14. Who knoweth if he will return &c.] Who knoweth whether your humiliation may not yet prevail with Him, and cause Him to withdraw His judgments, and instead thereof to bestow a blessing of plenty upon us; so that there may be both matter and occasion for the sacrifices of our thanksgiving unto the Lord? Bp. Hall.

16. Gather the people, &c.] As their sin and its punishment was national, extending to all ranks and degrees of people, the repentance and humiliation was to be as extensive and general. All are summoned; none exempted. Wogan.

17. —— between the porch and the altar,] The altar of burnt offerings stood before the porch of the temple, 2 Chron. viii. 12; and the mid-space in the open court was naturally a place of great concourse, that the prayers of the people might accompany the sacrifice. Abp. Newcome.

—— and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord,] It was usual to prescribe certain forms of prayer or praise to the priests in their publick ministrations: see Hosea xiv. 2; 1 Chron. xvi. 36. Such was this here mentioned, wherein they beseech God to deliver His people, not for any merit of theirs, but for the glory of His own name, lest the neighbouring heathens should take occasion to blaspheme His name, as if He were not able to protect His people. Compare Ps. xlii. 10; lxxix. 10; cxv. 2. W. Lowth.

—— that the heathen should rule over them:] Or, as in the margin, "should use a byword against them;" that is, should make them the subject of scorn and derision, as if they were forsaken by the God whom they worshipped. W. Lowth.

The translation "rule over them" may be supported; because, when they were distressed by the locusts, they would be an easier prey to an enemy: but to "make a proverb of them" is the more natural translation. Abp. Secker.

18. Then will the Lord be jealous for his land,] He will be moved with great affection for it, so as to take away what is injurious to it, and to seek its good, that it continue not desolate and a reproach to its enemies. Dr. Pocock.

20. — and his stink shall come up, &c.] That a strong and pestilential smell arises from the putrid heaps of locusts, whether driven upon land or cast up from the sea, in which they have perished, appears from the testimony of many writers. Among various other authorities to the same effect, St. Jerome is quoted by Bochart as saying, that in his time those troops of locusts, which covered Judea, were cast by the wind into the sea; and that, when the waters threw them up, their smell caused a pestilence. Thevenot says of them, "They live not above six months: and when dead, the stench of them so corrupts and infects the air, that it often occasions dreadful pestilences." Abp. Newcome.

—— because he hath done great things.] Or rather, "although he hath done great things." Though this army of insects, by Divine appointment, has made such destruction in the land, yet shall it come to this shameful end. W. Lowth. Or, "because He doth or shall do great things;" He, that is, Jehovah. Junius, Castalio.

23. — for he hath given you the former rain] In the margin, "a teacher of righteousness:" a translation, which the words will well bear; and which is given in many versions, and by many expositors of great note and learning, most of whom understand it as a prophecy of the Messiah. Dr. Pocock.

—— the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month.] See the notes on Deut. xi. 14; xxviii. 12; 1 Sam. xii. 17. The first month was Nisan, answering partly to our March, and partly to April.

25. — I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten,] That is, I will repair the damage, which the land has for several years received from the ravages of those devouring creatures. Dr. Pocock.

—— my great army] We have here a key to the grand and beautiful description which runs through these two chapters. Every reader must be struck with the poetical and sublime manner, in which the allegory is conducted. There is not a more splendid piece of poetry extant. Abp. Newcome.

27. And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel,] In order to a removal of the threatened evils, the people are exhorted to turn unto God by serious repentance, and are promised that on so doing they should be received again into His favour, and owned for His people. Dr. Pocock.

28. — I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh; &c.] The plentiful effusion of the Holy Spirit is mentioned by the Prophets as the peculiar character of the Gospel state: and it is elsewhere compared to the pouring out of waters upon a thirsty land, whereby it becomes fruitful. See Isai. xliv. 3; liv. 13; Jer. xxxi. This text is applied by St. Peter to the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the first believers, Acts ii. 17. "All flesh" comprehends the Gentiles as well as the Jews: which promise we see was punctually fulfilled, Acts x. 44; xi. 17. W. Lowth.

This prophecy is one of the clearest and most undoubted of any that foretold the establishment of the new law. It hath been fulfilled in the Christian church two ways: first, by the extraordinary effects of such a general effusion of the Holy Spirit, whereby the Apostles and primitive saints were empowered to work miracles, speak with diverse tongues, and foretell future events; and, secondly, in the more ordinary gifts of Divine grace, bestowed upon all Christians. Wogan.

29. And also upon the servants and upon the handmaids &c.] Not only, no particular sex or age, but also no particular condition, should render persons incapable of receiving the good gifts of God's Spirit "in those days;" that is, under the kingdom of Christ. See Gal. iii. 28; 1 Cor. vii. 22. Dr. Pocock.

30. And I will shew wonders in the heavens &c.] The Prophet, having foretold in the clearest terms the general effusion of the Holy Spirit, which was to characterize the Gospel dispensation, concludes this chapter with a striking description of the destruction of Jerusalem, which followed soon after, and punished the Jews for their obstinate rejection of the sacred influence: speaking in terms, which, as well as those of our Saviour that resemble them, have a double aspect, and refer to a primary and a final dispensation. Compare Matt. xxiv. 29. Dr. Gray.

Very great slaughter, and the burning of many towns, and even of a part of Jerusalem itself, preceded the destruction of the city and the temple, and the total subversion of the Jewish polity, by the Romans. Abp. Newcome.

31. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood,] That is, into the colour of blood. Harmer. These expressions may be understood of the "fearful sights, and great signs from heaven," Luke xxi. 11, which alarmed the minds of the Jews before the taking of Jerusalem by Titus. Abp. Newcome. Or, as some expositors think, they are meant, not literally, but metaphorically; and denote such calamities as should deprive the people of all sight of comfort. Dr. Pocock. See the notes on Isaiah xiii. 10, 13.

—— before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come.] These wonderful things were in part shewn at the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus; but they shall be fully and perfectly completed towards the end of the world, before the last judgment; which time deserves signally to be called "the day of the Lord," and "the great day," for the great things that shall be done in it; and "the terrible day," for all the judgments that are in it to be executed upon all the people who have ever lived in the world. Dr. Pocock.

32. — whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord] St. Paul, Rom. x. 13, explains this of such persons as give themselves up to Christ, and profess themselves His disciples; that being the most effectual means of escaping the judgments coming upon the unbelieving Jews, and likewise of being "delivered from the wrath to come:" see Luke xxi. 22; 1 Thess. ii. 16. W. Lowth.

This "calling on the name of the LORD," mentioned by the Prophet, and applied by the Apostle to Jesus Christ, plainly proves that Jesus is the Lord Jehovah, and that He is to be invoked as the proper object of prayer. Wogan. See the note on Rom. x. 13.

——for in mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance,] These words may be understood figuratively of the Church of God; which, having been first seated in mount Zion and Jerusalem, and thence extended all the world over, Luke xxiv. 47, carried the name thereof along with it. Dr. Pocock.

——and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call.] Namely, such as should embrace the Gospel, and thus escape the dangers and destruction which would seize on others. Dr. Pocock.

Chap. III. ver. 1. — in those days, and in that time,] The time called "the last days," chap. ii. 28, according to St. Peter's interpretation, Acts ii. 17, which comprehends all that time which reaches from the first to the second appearance of the Messiah: see the note upon Isai. ii. 2. The context shews that here is probably meant the latter part of these last days or times. W. Lowth.

—— when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem,] That is, when all the Jews then living, wheresoever dispersed, shall be converted to Christianity, and thereupon shall be brought back by God to their own country of Judah, and shall again inhabit Jerusalem. Dr. Wells. Or the words may be interpreted, not literally of bringing back the Jews to their ancient seat, but of freeing them from the captivity of sin, and the yoke of the Mosaical law. Dr. Pocock.

2. I will also gather all nations,] Taking the words in a spiritual sense, such as are enemies to God's Church, and the true Christian religion. Thus the Jews felt His judgments by the destruction of their city and commonwealth, soon after Christ's first coming; and at His second coming punishment shall be inflicted on all the wicked. Dr. Pocock.

——the valley of Jehoshaphat,] That is, the place where the Lord will execute judgment; for so the word "Jehoshaphat" signifies, being compounded of Jehovah, and shaphat, which means to judge. The expression likewise alludes to the valley of Berachah, as it was afterwards called, 2 Chron. xx. 26, which was famous for the victory gained there by Jehoshaphat and his people over a great confederacy of their enemies. This valley was not far from Jerusalem, if it be the same with that described Zech. xiv. 4. W. Lowth, Dr. Wells.

—— and will plead with them there] God pleads with men, and vindicates the cause of oppressed truth and innocence by His judgments. Then their own consciences fly in the face of the guilty, and force them to acknowledge the justice of their punishments. Compare Ezek. xvii. 20; xx. 35; xxxviii. 22. W. Lowth.

3. And they have cast lots for my people; &c.] And they have scornfully and proudly tyrannized over My people, and have cast lots upon them, as some slight commodities for sale or exchange; and have given a boy for the price of their lust to a harlot, and sold a girl only for a cup of wine to drink. Bp. Hall.

The way of dividing captives by lot appears to have been in use of old among nations: compare Nahum iii. 10; Obad. ver. 11. Dr. Pocock.

4. Yea, and what have ye to do with me, O Tyre, and Zidon,] When the Babylonians, the appointed instruments of My vengeance, afflict My land, why do you also and the bordering nations assist them? Do you take this occasion of avenging the former victories of My people over you? If so, this your act of revenge shall be speedily punished. Abp. Newcome.

5. Because ye have taken my silver and my gold, &c.] The temple was despoiled of its ornaments, either through the necessities or wickedness of the kings of Judah, several times; see 2 Kings xii. 18; xviii. 16; 2 Chron. xxviii. 24. It was likewise plundered by the Chaldeans often; once in the reign of Jehoiakim, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 7; then in the short reign of Jehoiachin, 2 Kings xxiv. 13, before the last destruction of it, 2 Kings xxv. 17, 18. Some part of the furniture might perhaps be sold to the merchants of Tyre and Sidon. W. Lowth.

6. The children also of Judah — have ye sold] It was customary for the merchants of the neighbouring countries to buy the children of Israel for slaves, in order to sell them again. See 1 Mac. iii. 41. Javan, that is, Greece, particularly dealt in that sort of traffick, Ezek. xxvii. 13. W. Lowth.

7. Behold, I will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, &c.] Grotius thinks that this promise concerning the children of Judah was made good under Alexander the Great and his successors, who in favour of the Jewish nation restored to liberty many Jews who were captives or in servitude in Greece: and that the threatening in the next verse concerning the persecutors of the Jews had its effect when the same Alexander took Gaza, Sidon, and Tyre. Others think the fulfilling of these things may be referred to the times of Cyrus or of the Maccabees. The general import of the passage is, that though God sometimes suffers His people to be trampled on, and contemptuously used, and injuriously treated by His and their enemies, yet He will in due time deliver them from the hand of their enemies, to whom He will render a just reward, proportionable to the wrong that they have done to His people. Dr. Pocock.

9. Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles;] After these particular threatenings against Tyre and Sidon, and the neighbouring coast, the Prophet returns to what he had mentioned, ver. 2, concerning the heathen or unbelieving world, gathering themselves either to oppose the Jews in their return homeward, or some other way to hinder the growth of Christ's kingdom. W. Lowth.

—— Prepare war, &c.] The Prophet in an ironical and insulting manner encourages them to make their utmost efforts to oppose the designs of Providence: but it should be all in vain. See the like expressions, Isai. viii. 9, 10; Jer. xlvi. 3, 4; Ezek. xxxviii. 7. W. Lowth.

11. —thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord.] According to this rendering of the passage, interpreters understand by "mighty ones" the angels of God, sent down to defeat His enemies. But in the margin it is rendered, "the Lord shall bring down;" and in our older English Bibles, "then shall the Lord cast down the mighty men:" that is, such as, presuming on their might, rebelliously exalted themselves against God and His people. Dr. Pocock.

12. —there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about.] God here speaks after the manner of men, with whom it is usual for the judge, examining matters and giving sentence, to sit: not as if sitting and standing were postures properly attributed to God. Dr. Pocock.

13. Put ye in the sickle, &c.] God will give His commands to the angels, who are "the reapers," Matt. xiii. 39, to cut off the wicked by a speedy destruction; for their iniquities are come to maturity, and are ripe for judgment. Compare Jer. li. 33; Hos. vi. 11; Matt. xiii. 38, 41; Rev. xiv. 15. W. Lowth.

14. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision:] O what multitudes, what infinite multitudes of wicked sinners, shall then and there be adjudged! Bp. Hall. "The valley of decision" is so called, because God will there decide on those assembled before Him, and pass judgment on them according to their deeds; for which reason it was before called "the valley of Jehoshaphat." Dr. Pocock. See the second note on ver. 2.

15. The sun and the moon shall be darkened, &c.] This particular judgment shall be a forerunner of the general one, when the whole frame of nature shall be dissolved. Particular judgments upon kingdoms and nations are often described in such terms as properly belong to the general judgment. W. Lowth. The words, in their plainest and most literal exposition, seem to denote such prodigies as shall precede or attend the last dreadful day, and among them a real alteration in the shining of the sun, moon, and stars, not used here, as they are elsewhere, for comparative expressions, but to signify what shall then really and actually be. Dr. Pocock.

16. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion,] Where He shall give tokens of His especial residence. W. Lowth. Or, by Zion and Jerusalem may be understood heaven, the seat of His glory, the representation of which was formerly in the sanctuary, Heb. xii. 22. Bp. Hall, Dr. Pocock. God's anger, when He speaks to us by His judgments, is fitly compared to the roaring of a lion: see Jer. xxv. 30; Amos i. 2; iii. 8. W. Lowth.

—— and the heavens and the earth shall shake:] Great commotions or convulsions of states and governments are expressed by "shaking the heavens and the earth:" compare Ezek. xxxviii. 19; Haggai ii. 6, 22. But here the words may be understood in a literal sense, because the action here described in this chapter is a forerunner and token of the approaching day of judgment. W. Lowth.

17. —then shall Jerusalem be holy, &c.] This character belongs to the "new Jerusalem." Compare Isai. xxxv. 8; lii. 1; lx. 21; Rev. xxi. 27. Or it may be understood of the earthly Jerusalem, as the metropolis of the converted world. As the inhabitants themselves shall be holy, so the city shall be called the "Holy City," as in former times it was; see Dan. ix. 16; Zech. viii. 3: compare Isai. xxiv. 23; Micah iv. 7; Obad. ver. 17. It shall be no longer subject to be polluted or oppressed by unbelievers: compare Nahum i. 15. W. Lowth.

18. And it shall come to pass in that day, &c.] And it shall come to pass in those last times, wherein the Gospel shall be published, that God shall give plenty of spiritual nourishment to His Church; so that every part thereof shall abound with effectual help and means of salvation: and from thence shall flow forth those waters of life, which shall water and refresh the souls of all the faithful followers of God. Bp. Hall.

—— and shall water the valley of Shittim.] See the note from

Before CHRIST about 800.

19 Egypt shall be a desolation, and Edom shall be a desolate wilderness, for the violence against the children of Judah, because they have shed innocent blood in their land.

20 But Judah shall ‖ dwell for ever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation.

21 For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed: ‖ for the LORD dwelleth in Zion.

‖ Or, abide.

‖ Or. even I the LORD that dwelleth in Zion.

Bp. Bagot on Ezek. xlvii. 1. The distance of this place from Jerusalem may denote the large extent of God's blessing: or the nature of the place, which was dry and barren, and productive of nothing but thorns and rushes, may, under the figure of its being watered by the fountain from the house of the Lord, signify the efficaciousness of the grace of God conveyed by the Gospel. Dr. Pocock.

19. Egypt — Edom] These two people were remarkable for their enmity to the Jews; they are taken in the general sense for the enemies of God's people: see the note upon Isai. xi. 14. W. Lowth.

20. But Judah shall dwell for ever, &c.] Many interpreters understand this not literally of Judah and Jerusalem, but figuratively of the Church of God: and affirm that the promise is made good even in this world, by Christ's ruling in the midst of His enemies, and protecting His Church amidst her daily afflictions; but that it shall be fully performed in heaven, when, being placed out of all fear of danger, we shall eternally reign with Christ. Dr. Pocock.

21. For I will cleanse their blood &c.] I will thoroughly cleanse them from their sins and pollutions; which shall not rise up any more in judgment against them. W. Lowth.

A M O S.

INTRODUCTION.

AMOS appears to have been contemporary with Hosea, but it is uncertain which was the first favoured by Divine revelations. They both began to prophesy during the time that Uzziah and Jeroboam the Second reigned over their respective kingdoms; and Amos saw his first vision "two years before the earthquake," Amos i. 1; which, as we learn from Zechariah, chap. xiv. 5, happened in the days of Uzziah. Amos, however, began to prophesy some time between the year of the world 3194 and 3219. Some have confounded him with the father of Isaiah.

The Prophet Amos was a native of Tekoa, a small town in the territory of Judah, about four leagues southward from Jerusalem, and six southward from Bethlehem, Amos i. 1; 2 Chron. xi. 5, 6; adjacent to a vast wilderness, where probably he exercised his profession.

Amos was an herdsman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit, chap. vii. 14. In the simplicity of former times, and in the happy climates of the East, these occupations were by no means considered in that degrading light in which they have been viewed, since refinement hath introduced a taste for the elegant arts of life. He was no Prophet, as he informed Amaziah, chap. vii. 14, neither was he a Prophet's son: that is, he had no regular education in the schools of the Prophets, but was called by an express irresistible commission from God (chap. iii. 8; vii. 15.) to prophesy unto His people Israel. The Holy Spirit did not disdain to speak by the voice of the most humble man; and selected His ministers as well from the tents of the shepherd, as from the palace of the sovereign, 1 Cor. i. 27—29: respecting only the qualities, and not the conditions, of His agents, inasmuch as He was capable of inspiring knowledge and eloquence where they did not previously exist.

Amos undoubtedly composed his prophecies in their present form. He speaks of himself as the author of them, chap. vii. 8; viii. 1, 2; and his prophetick character is established, not only by the admission of his book into the canon, and by the testimony of other writers, Tobit ii. 6; Acts vii. 42, 43; xv. 15—17; but by the exact accomplishment of many prophecies which he delivered. His work consists of several distinct discourses; the particular period of their delivery cannot now be ascertained. They chiefly respect the kingdom of Israel, though he sometimes inveighs against Judah, and threatens the kingdoms that bordered on Palestine; as the Syrians, Philistines, Tyrians, Edomites, Ammonites, and Moabites. He predicts, in clear terms, the captivities and the destruction of Israel, to be preceded by fearful signs on earth, and in the heavens, chap. viii. 8—13; concluding with assurances that God would not utterly destroy the house of Jacob; but after sifting, as it were, and cleansing the house of Israel among the nations, God should again raise up the tabernacle, that is, the kingdom of David, to be enlarged to more than its first splendour by the accession of Gentile subjects; and to be succeeded by the establishment of that government, which the Prophet describes under poetical images as a blessed dispensation of security, abundance, and peace, chap. ix. 11—15. Dr. Gray.

This Prophet borrows many images from the scenes in which he had been engaged; but he introduces them with skill, and gives them force and dignity by the eloquence and grandeur of his manner. We shall find in him many affecting and pathetick, many elegant and sublime passages. No Prophet has more magnificently described the Deity; or more gravely rebuked the luxurious; or reproved injustice and oppression with greater warmth and a more generous indignation. Bp. Lowth, an eminent judge and master of style, pronounces him nearly equal to the very first Prophets in elevation of sentiments and loftiness of spirit, and scarcely inferiour to any in splendour of diction and beauty of composition. Abp. Newcome.

CHAP. I.

Before CHRIST 787.

1 Amos sheweth God's judgment upon Syria, 6 upon the Philistines, 9 upon Tyrus, 11 upon Edom, 13 upon Ammon.

THE words of Amos, who was among the herdmen of Tekoa, which he saw concerning Israel in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel, two years before the [a] earthquake. Before CHRIST 787.

[a] Zech. 14. 5.

2 And he said, The LORD will [b] roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the habitations of the shepherds shall mourn, and the top of Carmel shall wither.

[b] Jer. 25. 30. Joel 3. 16.

Chap. I. ver. 1. — the herdmen of Tekoa,] See the introduction.

—— concerning Israel] The prophecy relates chiefly to the ten tribes, or kingdom of Israel: though the Prophet briefly denounces God's judgments, not only against Judah, but likewise against the Syrians, Philistines, and other neighbouring people. W. Lowth.

—— earthquake.] This earthquake is referred to Zech. xiv. 5: and probably, as Bp. Lowth thinks, Isai. v. 25, Josephus describes some of its effects: he attributes it to Uzziah's invasion of the priests' office, recorded 2 Chron. xxvi. 16. Abp. Newcome.

2. — The Lord will roar from Zion, &c.] This phrase occurs Joel iii. 16. See also Jer. xxv. 30. The meaning is, that God will soon spread terrour, like beasts of prey when they roar; chap. iii. 8: in other words, that He will soon display His power in executing judgment. The particular judgment here threatened is a drought. See chap. iv. 6; vi. 12. Abp. Newcome.

Before CHRIST 787.

3 Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Damascus, ‖ and for four, I will not ‖ turn away the punishment thereof; because they have threshed Gilead with threshing instruments of iron:

‖ Or, yea, for four.

4 But I will send a fire into the house of Hazael, which shall devour the palaces of Ben-hadad.

‖ Or, convert it, or, let it be quiet: and so ver. 6, &c.

5 I will break also the bar of Damascus, and cut off the inhabitant from ‖ the plain of Aven, and him that holdeth the sceptre from ‖ the house of Eden: and the people of Syria shall go into captivity unto Kir, saith the LORD.

‖ Or, Bikath-aven.

‖ Or, Beth-eden.

6 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of [c] Gaza, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they ‖ carried away captive the whole captivity, to deliver them up to Edom:

[c] 2 Chron. 28. 18.

‖ Or, carried them away with an entire captivity.

7 But I will send a fire on the wall of Gaza, which shall devour the palaces thereof:

8 And I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod, and him that holdeth the sceptre from Ashkelon, and I will turn mine hand against Ekron: and the remnant of the Philistines shall perish, saith the Lord GOD.

Before CHRIST 787.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Tyrus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they delivered up the whole captivity to Edom, and remembered not † the brotherly covenant:

† Heb. the covenant of brethren.

10 But I will send a fire on the wall of Tyrus, which shall devour the palaces thereof.

11 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Edom, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because he did pursue his brother with the sword, and † did cast off all pity, and his anger did tear perpetually, and he kept his wrath for ever:

† Heb. corrupted his compassions.

12 But I will send a fire upon Teman, which shall devour the palaces of Bozrah.

13 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of the children of Ammon,

3. — For three transgressions of Damascus, and for four,] The Prophet begins with denouncing judgments against foreign countries, and then comes to Judah and Israel. The first he threatens is "Syria," the head or capital city of which was "Damascus," (see Isaiah vii. 8,) for the several transgressions, which they had committed, expressed by "three transgressions and four." See Job v. 19. W. Lowth.

—— they have threshed Gilead &c.] This alludes to the threshing-wain described Isai. xli. 15. It moved on wheels which had teeth, and at once forced out the grain, and cut the straw. Abp. Newcome. The cruelties exercised by Hazael and Ben-hadad, kings of Syria, are here intended. See 2 Kings x. 32, 33; xiii. 3—7. W. Lowth.

4. — I will send a fire] To which God's judgments are often compared: the word is taken in this general sense in the following verses. W. Lowth.

5. I will break also the bar of Damascus,] I will send an enemy that shall break or force open the gates of Damascus, though never so strongly barred or barricadoed. Dr. Wells.

—— the plain of Aven,] Or, Bikath-aven: the word signifies "the plain of vanity;" whence some conjecture it was a place in Syria, remarkable for idolatry, as Beth-el is called Beth-aven for that reason, Hos. v. 8. W. Lowth.

—— the house of Eden:] This is equivalent to 'the house of pleasure:' so it may denote one of the pleasant palaces belonging to the king of Syria, described by "him that holdeth the sceptre." But "Eden" was likewise a country bordering upon Syria, mentioned 2 Kings xix. 12; Ezek. xxvii. 23. See note there. Mr. Maundrell in his Travels observes, that not far from Damascus there is a plain still called the "valley of Bocat," which he supposes the same with "Bikath-aven," here mentioned: and there is a place at this time called "Eden" near it. W. Lowth.

—— Kir,] Probably a city of Elymais, Isai. xxii. 6. The completion of this prophecy is recorded 2 Kings xvi. 9. Abp Newcome.

6. — Gaza,] This city was situated on the coast of Palestine, and is one of those threatened by Joel, chap. iii. 6. W. Lowth. Hezekiah smote it, 2 Kings xviii. 8: Pharaoh king of Egypt smote it, Jer. xlvii. 1: Alexander the Great took it, as related by Quintus Curtius. Abp. Newcome.

—— they carried away captive the whole captivity, &c.] The Philistines, as well as the people of Damascus, used great cruelties against the Israelites, but in a different way. The Damascenes slew those whom they took; the Philistines sold them, without any hope of future deliverance, to the Edomites, the most deadly enemies of the people of God. Danæus.

8. — Ashdod, &c.] "Ashdod," or Azotus, "Ashkelon," or Ascalon, and "Ekron," as well as Gaza, were chief towns of the Philistines. Gath, which was formerly another principal town, and the capital of a lordship or petty kingdom, 1 Sam. vi. 17, 18, is not here mentioned, as having been lately taken by Uzziah, the reigning king of Judah, as was Ashkelon afterwards, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, whereby this prophecy was in part quickly fulfilled. Dr. Wells. All Syria was subdued by Pharaoh-necho; and again, as far as Pelusium, by Nabuchodonosor, as Josephus relates. Berosus also mentions that Nabuchodonosor conquered Syria and all Phenicia. Abp. Newcome.

9. — Tyrus,] This is probably to be understood of the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, foretold by Isaiah, chap. xxiii; by Jeremiah, chap. xlvii. 4, where it is joined, as here, with the Philistines; and by Ezekiel, chap. xxvi, xxvii. W. Lowth.

—— remembered not the brotherly covenant:] Made by Hiram with David and Solomon. See 2 Sam. v. 11; 1 Kings v. 1; ix. 13.

11. — he did pursue his brother with the sword,] The two nations were descended from Jacob and Esau, who were brethren. It is probable that before Amos prophesied, the Edomites had often distressed Judah and Israel in times of calamity. That this was their custom, see 2 Chron. xxviii. 17. But the words may be spoken prophetically of the conduct which the Edomites would pursue at the taking of Jerusalem by the Babylonians, Obad. 11—14; Ezek. xxv. 12; xxxv. 5; Ps. cxxxvii. 7. Abp. Newcome.

12. — I will send a fire &c.] Nebuchadnezzar subdued the Edomites, Jer. xxv. 9, 21; xxvii. 3, 6. Judas Maccabeus obtained a great victory over them, 1 Mac. v. 3; probably after they had left the Nabatheans in consequence of a sedition, and had settled to the south of Judah: for it seems that the Babylonian conquests had compelled them to take refuge in that part of Arabia. Afterwards Hyrcanus reduced them under subjection, and permitted them to remain in their country, on condition that they conformed to the Jewish laws: see the note on Obad. ver. 2. Teman and Bozrah were cities of Idumea. Abp. Newcome.

13. — of the children of Ammon,] Hazael king of Syria grievously afflicted the Israelites that lay eastward of Jordan, particularly the Gileadites; see 2 Kings x. 33. The low condition, to which these countries were reduced, might probably encourage and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have ‖ ripped up the women with child of Gilead, that they might enlarge their border:

‖ Or, divided the mountains.

14 But I will kindle a fire in the wall of Rabbah, and it shall devour the palaces thereof, with shouting in the day of battle, with a tempest in the day of the whirlwind:

15 And their king shall go into captivity, he and his princes together, saith the LORD.

CHAP. II.

1 God's wrath against Moab, 4 upon Judah, 6 and upon Israel. 9 God complaineth of their unthankfulness.

THUS saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Moab, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because he [a] burned the bones of the king of Edom into lime:

[a] 2 Kings 3. 27.

2 But I will send a fire upon Moab, and it shall devour the palaces of Kirioth: and Moab shall die with tumult, with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet:

3 And I will cut off the judge from the midst thereof, and will slay all the princes thereof with him, saith the LORD.

Before CHRIST 787.

4 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Judah, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have despised the law of the LORD, and have not kept his commandments, and their lies caused them to err, after the which their fathers have walked:

5 But I will send a fire upon Judah, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem.

6 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because [b] they sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes;

[b] Chap. 8. 6.

7 That pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor, and turn aside the way of the meek: and a man and his father will go in unto the same ‖ maid, to profane my holy name:

‖ Or, young woman.

8 And they lay themselves down upon clothes laid to pledge by every altar, and they drink the wine of ‖ the condemned in the house of their god.

‖ Or, such as have fined, or, mulcted.

the Ammonites to possess themselves of Gilead, which lay near their own borders, and to destroy the inhabitants in the cruel manner here described. Compare Jer. xlix. 1; Zeph. ii. 8; Hos. xiii. 16. W. Lowth. The histories of those times, transmitted down to us, are so concise, that we often want information concerning the particular facts alluded to. Abp. Newcome.

14. — Rabbah,] This was the capital city of the Ammonites, who were conquered by Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xxvii. 5, 6. Abp. Newcome.

—— with a tempest in the day of the whirlwind:] The destructions of war are often compared to the devastations caused by whirlwinds and tempests: see Isai. v. 26; Jer. xxv. 32; Dan. xi. 40; Zech. ix. 14. W. Lowth.

Chap. II. ver. 1. — Moab,] As Moab and Ammon were nearly related, and bordered upon each other, so they are usually joined together in the threatenings of the Prophets: see Jer. xlviii, xlix; Ezek. xxv. 1—8; Zeph. ii. 8. W. Lowth. For the origin of these two people, see Gen. xix. 37, 38. Their country lay to the east of the Dead sea. Abp. Newcome.

—— because he burned the bones of the king of Edom into lime:] That is, into ashes, out of contempt and inhumanity. This is in all probability to be looked on as a distinct fact from that related in 2 Kings iii. 27, the circumstances being so widely different. Kirioth was the chief city of Moab. Dr. Wells.

3. — the judge] This word denotes the supreme magistrate or governour, see Deut. xvii. 9, and is here equivalent to the king. Compare Mic. v. 1. W. Lowth. Moab was conquered by Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xxvii. 3, 6. Abp. Newcome.

6. — Israel,] Amos first prophesied against the Syrians, Philistines, Tyrians, Edomites, Ammonites, and Moabites; who dwelt in the neighbourhood of the twelve tribes, and had occasionally become their enemies and oppressors. Having thus taught his countrymen that the providence of God extended to other nations, he briefly mentions the idolatries and consequent destruction of Judah, and then passes on to his proper subject, which was to exhort and reprove the kingdom of Israel, and to denounce judgments against it. The reason why that kingdom was particularly addressed seems to have been, that Pul invaded it in the reign of Uzziah, 2 Kings xv. 19; and that in less than half a century after the first Assyrian invasion, it was subverted by Shalmaneser, 2 Kings xvii. 6. Abp. Newcome.

The particular sins, for which the Israelites are threatened with punishment, were, first, Their notorious cruelty and oppression in the corrupt administration of justice; Secondly, Their covetousness, in perverting justice for the most paltry recompence; Thirdly, Their licentious and incestuous commerce. Danæus.

7. That pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor,] All their desire is after this unprofitable dust of the earth, silver and gold, which they eagerly desire to gain, even by trampling on the heads of the poor. Bp. Hall. Or the sense may be taken according to the Latin version, "Who tread down the heads of the poor into the dust of the earth;" that is, they throw them into the dust, and then trample upon them. W. Lowth.

—— turn aside the way of the meek:] That is, from right and justice: see chap. v. 12; Isai. x. 1; xxix. 21. Abp. Newcome.

—— to profane my holy name:] To treat Me as if I was not a holy and fearful God, Ezek. xx. 39; or, by giving occasion of reproach among the heathen, Ezek. xx. 9. Abp. Newcome.

8. And they lay themselves down &c.] This is to be understood of the feasts, which were made of part of their idolatrous sacrifices, and were eaten in some of the apartments of their temples, according to the custom both of the Jews and Gentiles: see 1 Sam. ix. 12, 13, 22; Isai. lvii. 7; Ezek xxiii. 41. The Prophet reproves them, not only for partaking of things offered to idols, but likewise for making use of other men's furniture, left in their hands for a pledge, to set off their idolatrous entertainments. Here was another instance of their unmercifulness, to detain pledges received from the poor, contrary to law, Exod. xxii. 26. See note upon Ezek. xviii. 7. The Jews as well as the Romans used to lie along at their meals on couches, as appears by this verse; compare chap. vi. 4. This custom continued in aftertimes, as appears by several places in the Gospels, where it is in the original, "lay down to meat;" though our translation renders it "sat down to meat." The custom of sitting at meals seems to have been the more ancient of the two. See Gen. xliii. 33; 1 Sam. ix. 22; xvi. 11; xx. 25. W. Lowth.

—— and they drink the wine of the condemned] The drink offerings made with wine were a necessary part of the sacrifices; some of them were reserved for the entertainment that followed:

Before CHRIST 787.

9 ¶ Yet destroyed I the [e] Amorite before them, whose height was like the height of the cedars, and he was strong as the oaks; yet I destroyed his fruit from above, and his roots from beneath.

[e] Numb. 21. 24. Deut. 2. 31. Josh. 24. 8.

10 Also [d] I brought you up from the land of Egypt, and led you forty years through the wilderness, to possess the land of the Amorite.

[d] Exod. 12. 51.

11 And I raised up of your sons for prophets, and of your young men for Nazarites. Is it not even thus, O ye children of Israel? saith the LORD.

12 But ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink; and commanded the prophets, [e] saying, Prophesy not.

[e] Chap. 7. 12.

13 Behold, ‖ I am pressed under you, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves.

‖ Or, I will press your place, as a cart full of sheaves presseth.

14 Therefore the flight shall perish from the swift, and the strong shall not strengthen his force, neither shall the mighty deliver † himself:

† Heb. his soul, or, life.

15 Neither shall he stand that handleth the bow; and he that is swift of foot shall not deliver himself: neither shall he that rideth the horse deliver himself.

† Heb. strong of his heart.

16 And he that is † courageous among the mighty shall flee away naked in that day, saith the LORD.

Before CHRIST 787.

CHAP. III.

1 The necessity of God's judgment against Israel. 9 The publication of it, with the causes thereof.

HEAR this word that the LORD hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, against the whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt, saying,

2 You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will † punish you for all your iniquities.

† Heb. visit upon.

3 Can two walk together, except they be agreed?

4 Will a lion roar in the forest, when he hath no prey? will a young lion † cry out of his den, if he have taken nothing?

5 Can a bird fall in a snare upon the earth, where no gin is for him? shall one take up a snare from the earth, and have taken nothing at all?

‖ Or, not run together.

6 Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people ‖ not be afraid? shall there be evil in a city, ‖ and the LORD hath not done it?

‖ Or, and shall not the LORD do somewhat?

see Exod. xxxii. 6. And this was provided out of the fines of such as had been unjustly condemned, ver. 6. W. Lowth.

9. Yet destroyed I the Amorite before them, &c.] The sins of the Israelites against God are here amplified by the sundry and great benefits of God towards the Israelites: first by the utter destruction of the powerful and valiant nation of the Amorites; and then by the blessings, which He bountifully bestowed upon them, as in their deliverance from Egypt, and their establishment in the promised land, ver. 10, so also in the guidance which He vouchsafed them by means of Prophets and holy men devoted to His service, ver. 11. But these benefits they neglected or despised, especially those of a spiritual kind; enticing the Nazarites to break their vow of abstinence, Numb. vi. 2, &c. and forbidding the admonitions of the Prophets, ver. 12. Danæus.

13. Behold, I am pressed under you, &c.] I am ever overlaid with your wickedness: it is with Me as with a cart that is overpressed with a load of sheaves, which goes heavily, and is ready to break under the burden. Bp. Hall.

14. Therefore the flight shall perish from the swift, &c.] That is, God shall render ineffectual all their resources and methods of escape; whether they be natural, as swiftness of foot and strength of body, or acquired by industry, diligence, and wit, as power and authority among others, skill in battle, or riches, and horses trained for war. Hence appears the vanity of all human devices set up in opposition to the judgments of God. Nothing but God's mercy can deliver us from His justice; and that mercy is to be obtained only by true repentance through the promises of God in Christ Jesus. Danæus.

Chap. III. ver. 1. — against the whole family &c.] All that family, of which Jacob or Israel was the head: "family" is equivalent to people, here and in the following verse; and so it is taken, Jer. i. 15; viii. 3; x. 25; Nahum iii. 4; Zech. xiv. 18. W. Lowth.

2. You only have I known &c.] You only have I chosen from all other nations for My peculiar people, and have bestowed most cost and care upon you: therefore, since you have abused My mercies and rebelled against Me, ye shall be surely punished. Bp. Hall. The more and the greater are the benefits of God towards a people, so much the more shameful is their ingratitude in despising God, and their sin the greater and more heinous. Danæus.

3. Can two walk together, except they be agreed?] Will common reason permit two to walk friendly together, unless they be real friends? In like manner it is altogether unreasonable for you to think, that I will deal with you as your friend, while ye thus sin against Me, and so act as those who hate Me, or are My enemies. Dr. Wells.

4. Will a lion roar in the forest, when he hath no prey?] As a lion doth not use to roar but when he hath his prey in view, so neither doth God denounce His judgments, unless your sins have made you proper objects of His displeasure. W. Lowth. Naturalists assert, that, when the lion sees his prey, he roars before he rushes on it, and that at this roaring many animals shew great fear. Abp. Newcome.

5. Can a bird fall in a snare upon the earth, where no gin is &c.] As birds are not caught without the net of the fowler being already set and laid; and as the fowler doth not take up his nets, before he has secured a prey; so neither doth God threaten these things, without being prepared to execute His judgments; nor will He withdraw His hand, but will punish you, except ye repent. Danæus.

6. Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people not be afraid? &c.] Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, to summon the inhabitants to the walls, yet the people find no cause of the fear of an enemy? no more would God by His Prophets denounce these imminent judgments, if there were not just cause to expect and fear their speedy execution: and who shall or can execute them, but the just and powerful hand of God? Can there be any evil of punishment in the city, yea in the world, which is not of His sending, His inflicting? Bp. Hall. Shall the evil of earthquakes, of unfruitful seasons, of hostile incursions, befall My people without My special appointment? Abp. Newcome.

By the "evil" here spoken of is not to be understood sin, or the evil of guiltiness, but affliction or trouble, or the evil of punishment; for God is not either the author or the cause of our sin,

Before CHRIST 787.

7 Surely the Lord GOD will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.

but we ourselves. Compare James i. 13, 14; Hosea xiii. 9. Danæus.

7. Surely the Lord God will do nothing, &c.] There was a succession of Prophets among the Jews from Samuel's time, till the captivity: the people commonly consulted them upon extraordinary occasions, and they gave them counsel and direction what was proper to be done. See chap. ii. 11; 1 Kings xxii. 13; 2 Kings iii. 11; xxii. 13; Jer. xxi. 2; Ezek. xx. 1, &c. The want of this prophetical gift was much lamented in the times of the captivity. See Ezek. vii. 26; Lament. ii. 9; Psal. lxxiv. 9. W. Lowth.

8. The lion hath roared, &c.] The awful admonitions uttered by the Prophets are as natural a consequence of God's command, as fear is of the lion's roaring. Abp. Newcome.

9. Publish in the palaces at Ashdod, &c.] God calls upon the heathen to be witnesses of His judgments upon His own people, that they may take warning thereby: particularly He gives notice to the "Philistines" and "Egyptians," the Jews' inveterate enemies, that they may assemble themselves, and with pleasure behold the ravages and oppressions which their insulting adversaries will bring upon the kingdom of Israel. W. Lowth.

12. — As the shepherd taketh out of the mouth of the lion &c.] As the shepherd, when a lion hath been devouring amongst his flock, finds some mangled remnants of a leg or an ear, which he carries home, to shew the spoil that hath been done by that fierce beast; so shall it be with Israel: of all the body of Samaria, there shall be some one or two left undevoured, for proof of the general slaughter and captivity. Bp. Hall.

—— that dwell — in the corner of a bed,] It means, that not many of those, who dwell and live delicately in Samaria, shall be able to deliver themselves from destruction. The delicacy and luxuriousness of their lives is described by their beds and couches, on which they daily lie and repose themselves. Danæus, Dr. Wells, Abp. Newcome.

Those now most at their ease shall be delivered to their enemies, like sheep to the lion: and scarce any of them be rescued from his jaws.

We learn from Bp. Pocock, Maundrell, Hanway, and other travellers, that in the East the place of honour, the most easy, voluptuous, indulging station, is the corner; and that it is the position in which great men usually place themselves. The word rendered "bed," may be understood of a divan or sofa. Harmer, Parkhurst, Fragments to Calmet. See the note on Deut. iii. 11, from Fragments to Calmet.

—— and in Damascus in a couch.] That is, who are now in high honour in their own, or indulging in foreign luxuries in other countries. Damascus was a most delightful place; and, as Amos delivered this prophecy "in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel," chap. i. 1, "who recovered Damascus for Israel," see 2 Kings xiv. 28, it is probable that many of the richer Israelites might choose to dwell there. Parkhurst.

14. — I will also visit the altars of Beth-el: &c.] I will reckon with Israel for his idolatries in Dan and Beth-el, and for those altars which he hath erected there, and will cause those miserected altars to be beaten down to the ground. Bp. Hall. See 1 Kings xii. 29, 32. The destruction of the altar at Beth-el is also foretold, chap. v. 5, and is perhaps referred to in Jer. xlviii. 13. Abp. Newcome.

15. And I will smite the winter house with the summer house;] See the note on Jer. xxxvi. 22.

—— the houses of ivory] The Romans anciently ornamented their houses with ivory: and the Eastern people might possibly do the same. Sir J. Chardin says, "the ceilings of the Eastern houses are of Mosaick work, and for the most part of ivory:" and Dr. Russell notices, that "ivory is likewise employed at Aleppo in the decoration of the more expensive apartments." Harmer. Such houses were probably called "ivory houses," just as the emperour Nero's palace, mentioned by Suetonius, was named "golden," because it was "overlaid with gold." Parkhurst.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. Hear this word, ye kine of Bashan, &c.] Hear this, O ye great and rich men of Samaria, that feed full and carelessly, like the kine in the fat pastures of Bashan: ye, who oppress the poor, and crush the needy; and say to your princes and judges, Set deep fines, and condemn freely, that we may feast upon the offences of the people. Bp. Hall.

The luxury and insolence of oppressors is often compared to the wantonness of full-fed cattle: see Ps. xxii. 12; lxviii. 30. Bashan was remarkable for the richness of its pastures, and its breed of cattle: Numb. xxxii. 4; Deut. xxxii. 14; Ezek. xxxix. 18. W. Lowth.

6 ¶ And I also have given you cleanness of teeth in all your cities, and want of bread in all your places: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

7 And also I have withholden the rain from you, when there were yet three months to the harvest: and I caused it to rain upon one city, and caused it not to rain upon another city: one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not withered.

8 So two or three cities wandered unto one city, to drink water; but they were not satisfied: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

Before CHRIST 787.

9 I have smitten you with blasting and mildew: ‖ when your gardens and your vineyards and your fig trees and your olive trees increased, the palmerworm devoured them: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

‖ Or, the multitude of your gardens, &c. did the palmerworm, &c.

10 I have sent among you the pestilence ‖ after the manner of Egypt: your young men have I slain with the sword, † and have taken away your horses; and I have made the stink of your camps to come up unto your nostrils: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

‖ Or, in the way. † Heb. with the captivity of your horses.

11 I have overthrown some of you, as God overthrew [a] Sodom and Gomorrah, and ye were as a firebrand plucked out of the burning: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

12 Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel.

13 For, lo, he that formeth the mountains, and createth the ‖ wind, and declareth unto man what is his thought, that maketh the morning darkness, and treadeth upon the high places of the earth, The LORD, The God of hosts, is his name.

2. — he will take you away with hooks,] Invaders and spoilers are elsewhere compared to fishers: see Jer. xvi. 16; Hab. i. 15. W. Lowth.

3. And ye shall go out &c.] The Prophet tells the people, that they shall with all possible haste make their escape at the several breaches which shall be made in the walls of Samaria. Compare 2 Kings xxv. 4; Ezek. xii. 12. W. Lowth.

—— and ye shall cast them into the palace,] The sentence may be thus translated, "Ye shall cast out yourselves," that is, ye shall with haste betake yourselves "to Harmon;" so the Latin Vulgate. W. Lowth.

4. Come to Beth-el, and transgress; &c.] Go ye up now, O ye foolish Israelites, to your Beth-el, if you please, and sin your fill: go up to Gilgal, and glut yourselves with the full scope of your iniquities; bring those your morning sacrifices, which are due unto God, bring and offer them to your idols; and that, which the law of God requires of you, for the maintenance of His Levites, (that is to say,) lay aside the tithes every third year for sacred use, do ye that to the priests of your idols: so also ver. 5. Bp. Hall.

A permission, spoken by way of sarcasm and irony, sharply upbraiding them as incorrigible, and not to be reformed by all the reproofs and admonitions that had been given them: like that of Ezekiel, chap. xx. 39, "Go ye, serve every one his idols." W. Lowth.

5. — proclaim and publish the free offerings:] Or "free-will offerings," Lev. xxii. 18, 21. These offerings were partaken of by the sacrificers; whence they gave notice of their intention to their friends, and invited them to the feast: see Deut. xii. 6, &c. W. Lowth.

6. And I also have given you &c.] After declaring the presumptuous idolatry of the Israelites, the Prophet describes their obstinate continuance in it, which was such, that they could not be withdrawn from it by any afflictions or punishments, and be turned to worship and serve the true God. In this and the following verses are enumerated the several afflictions, with which they were visited: such as famine, ver. 6; drought, ver. 7, 8; destruction of the fruits of the earth, ver. 9; pestilence, war, and defeat, ver. 10; and the overthrow of some of their cities, ver. 11. At the end of each of these punishments, it is to be observed, that the Prophet adds in the name of the Lord, "yet have ye not returned unto Me." This addition shews, that the mind of the Israelites was not only careless and unmoved amid these great miseries and calamities, but that it was also desperate and gone past recovery in their idolatry, which they could not by any means be wrought on to cast off, and so return by true repentance to the knowledge and worship of God. Danæus. It is the desire of God to reclaim men by afflictions, which for this purpose He sent among the Israelites. Bp. Hall.

12. Therefore thus will I do unto thee,] Since thou hast slighted all these judgments, I am resolved to execute upon thee the severest of all My vengeances; and since thou hearest I have taken up this determination to proceed against thee, therefore prepare thyself, O Israel, to meet thy God with unfeigned humiliation and repentance. Bp. Hall. Or the phrase, "Prepare thyself to meet thy God," may be understood as signifying, Prepare to meet My wrath; that is, expect the most terrible punishment. See Abp. Tillotson's note at the end of the chapter.

13. For, lo, he that formeth the mountains, &c.] For well thou knowest, there is no hoping to resist the power of the Almighty: it is He that formeth the mountains, and infuseth the spirit into man, and knoweth and declareth the thoughts of man's heart, as well as what Himself intends to do with him; it is He that can cloud the brightest day at pleasure, and can bring down the highest and strongest fortifications upon earth: He is the Lord of hosts; all things are at His command. Bp. Hall, Dr. Stokes.

In this chapter God upbraids His people several times with this, as the great aggravation of their sins, that they continued impenitent under all those terrible judgments, which He had sent upon them. "I have sent among you," says He, "want of bread,"

CHAP. V.

Before CHRIST 787.

1 A lamentation for Israel. 4 An exhortation to repentance. 21 God rejecteth their hypocritical service.

HEAR ye this word which I take up against you, even a lamentation, O house of Israel.

2 The virgin of Israel is fallen; she shall no more rise: she is forsaken upon her land; there is none to raise her up.

3 For thus saith the Lord GOD; The city that went out by a thousand shall leave an hundred, and that which went forth by an hundred shall leave ten, to the house of Israel.

4 ¶ For thus saith the LORD unto the house of Israel, Seek ye me, and ye shall live:

[a] Chap. 4. 4.

5 But seek not [a] Beth-el, nor enter into Gilgal, and pass not to Beer-sheba: for Gilgal shall surely go into captivity, and Beth-el shall come to nought.

6 Seek the LORD, and ye shall live; lest he break out like fire in the house of Joseph, and devour it, and there be none to quench it in Beth-el.

7 Ye who turn judgment to wormwood, and leave off righteousness in the earth, with night: that [c] calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth: The LORD is his name:

9 That strengtheneth the † spoiled against the strong, so that the spoiled shall come against the fortress.

10 They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly.

11 Forasmuch therefore as your treading is upon the poor, and ye take from him burdens of wheat: [d] ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them; ye have planted † pleasant vineyards, but ye shall not drink wine of them.

[d] Zeph. 1. 13.

12 For I know your manifold transgressions and your mighty sins: they afflict the just, they take ‖ a bribe, and they turn aside the poor in the gate from their right.

13 Therefore the prudent shall keep silence in that time; for it is an evil time.

14 Seek good, and not evil, that ye may live: and so the LORD, the God of hosts, shall be with you, as ye have spoken.

15 [e] Hate the evil, and love the good, and establish judgment in the gate: it may be that the LORD God of hosts will be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph.

and then "pestilence," and then "the sword," and last of all a terrible "fire," which had almost consumed them. "I have overthrown some of you, as God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and ye were as a firebrand plucked out of the burning; yet have ye not returned unto Me," ver. 11. And because all these judgments had not been effectual to reclaim them, He tells them, that He was resolved to go on in punishing; and therefore He bids them to expect it, and prepare themselves for it: "Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel," ver. 12. When God hath begun to punish a people, and they are not amended by it, the honour of His justice is concerned to proceed, and not to give over. By every sin that we commit, we offend God; but if He smite us, and we stand out against Him, then do we contend with Him, and strive for mastery. And when the sinner is upon these stubborn and insolent terms, then "prepare to meet thy God;" a bitter sarcasm, as if man could be a match for God, and a poor weak creature in any wise able to encounter Him, to whom power belongs. There is a severe expression concerning God's dealing with such perverse and obstinate sinners, Ps. xviii. 26, "with the froward Thou wilt shew thyself froward;" or, as the words may more properly and conveniently be rendered, "with the froward Thou wilt wrestle." God will not be outbraved by the sins of men; and therefore, if we continue impenitent, we have all the reason in the world to expect, that God should go on to punish. Abp. Tillotson.

Chap. V. ver. 1. — against you,] Rather, "over you." The allusion is to the lamentations made at funerals: see ver. 16; Jer. ix. 17; Ezek. xix. 1; xxvii. 2. So the Prophet bemoans the state of the kingdom of Israel, as dead and irrecoverably lost. W. Lowth.

3. — The city that went out by a thousand shall leave an hundred, &c.] So few shall be left alive, after the hard and long sieges of the Assyrians, that in those cities of Israel, out of which a thousand able men were wont to go forth to war, there now shall be left but a hundred, &c. Bp. Hall.

4, 5. — Seek ye me, — But seek not Beth-el, &c.] The Israelites are here commanded to seek the Lord, and to abstain from idols, such as were then in Beth-el, Gilgal, and Beer-sheba: and the admonition is enforced by two powerful considerations, that if they "seek the Lord, they shall live;" that is, shall enjoy life, and salvation, and deliverance from their troubles; but that if they seek their idols, they shall be cut off together with those objects of their idolatrous worship. Danæus.

7. Ye who turn judgment to wormwood,] Ye, who corrupt judgment, and make it grievous and hateful to My people. Bp. Hall.

8. — that maketh the seven stars &c.] Who maketh the great frame of the heavens, and all the glorious stars therein; who turneth the blackest night into a clear morning, and causeth the brightest day to end in a dark night; who causeth the waters of the sea to overswell their banks, and to drown the face of the earth. Bp. Hall. See Job ix. 9, and the note there from Chappelow.

10. — that rebuketh in the gate,] That judgeth uprightly, and freely and impartially rebuketh the wicked man on the bench of justice. Bp. Hall. See the notes on Gen. xxiii. 10; Job v. 4.

13. — the prudent shall keep silence in that time; &c.] Seeing that his admonitions will do no good to men wholly devoted to their own ways of unlawful gain, and will be injurious to such as rebuke them. Dr. Stokes.

14. — as ye have spoken.] Ye are wont to boast of your interest in the Lord, and of the promises made by Him to your fathers. Obedience is the condition required on your part to qualify you for His favour. W. Lowth.

16. —the husbandman &c.] Husbandmen shall have their part in the common sorrow, forasmuch as their corn shall be wasted and devoured; and those, whose trade and practice it is to make a common lamentation, shall now mourn in earnest, without a hire. Bp. Hall. See the note on Jer. ix. 17.

17. And in all vineyards shall be wailing:] Where there used to be shouting and rejoicing, when the summer fruits were gathered in. See Isai. xvi. 10; Jer. xxv. 30; xlviii. 33. W. Lowth.

18. Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! &c.] Woe to those among you, that mock at the tidings of this sad day of the Lord, and scornfully ask, why it doth not come, and when it will come! they shall find that it will come, little to their comfort; they shall find it is not a day for mirth or pleasure, but for heaviness and sorrow. Bp. Hall. Compare the passages in the margin.

19. As if a man did flee from a lion, &c.] It shall be with you as with a man, who, flying from a lion, meets in his way with a bear; and, to escape both, flies into a house, and, laying his hand upon the wall, to get over, is bitten by a serpent; so shall you, shunning one danger, fall into another. Bp. Hall.

20. Shall not the day &c.] A strong affirmation is conveyed in this question. Darkness is naturally put for calamity, and light for gladness. Abp. Newcome.

21—24. These four verses convey the same sense as Isai. i. 11—16; Jer. vi. 20; vii. 21—23; Hos. vi. 6; viii. 13: all which places import, how little valuable are the external rites of religion, unless they are accompanied with universal obedience. W. Lowth.

23. —thy songs; —thy viols.] The usual accompaniments of sacrifices among both Jews and heathens. Abp. Newcome. The psalms and hymns were sung in the temple with instrumental musick. W. Lowth.

24. But let judgment run down as waters, &c.] Instead of relying upon mere outward offerings in honour of Me, take care that justice be impartially administered, so that every one may partake of it as of the waters of a river; and take care also, that all live holy and righteous lives, so that their good example may, like a mighty stream, bear down all wickedness before it. Dr. Wells.

25, 26. Have ye offered &c.] Have ye not forty entire years together, in the wilderness, bewrayed your averseness from Me, and your inclination to idolatry? Was it to Me, that in this while ye offered your sacrifices, O ye house of Israel? No: howsoever ye pretended to bear My tabernacle, yet indeed ye did your services and oblations to your god Moloch, and the other images of those planetary gods whom ye worshipped. Bp. Hall.

In the former verse, the emphasis lies in the word "Me." Did ye offer such sacrifices as were acceptable to Me: such entire and undivided service as I enjoined? In the latter verse God is introduced as replying; No, ye sometimes carried about Moloch in his shrine or tabernacle. Abp. Newcome. "The tabernacle of Moloch" was a shrine, with the image of the Deity placed within it: such were the silver shrines of Diana, Acts xix. 24; and the Thensæ or Lecticæ among the Romans. These their votaries carried in procession; as a solemn piece of worship, or pledge of the presence of their gods among them. See Isai. xlvi. 7. Moloch is an idol often mentioned in Scripture. Chiun is generally supposed by learned men to be the same with Saturn. The same idol was called Remphan, or Rephan, by the Egyptians. W. Lowth.

26. —the star of your god,] The heathens had images that represented the heavenly bodies; see 2 Kings xxiii. 11; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4: so the image of Chiun represented the star of Saturn, as that of Moloch did the sun. W. Lowth. Or, probably here is an allusion to the figure of a star, fixed on the head of an image of a false god. Abp. Newcome.

The sorts of idolatry here recited are not to be restrained to the time, during which the Israelites lived in the wilderness, but are to be extended over the whole space which passed from their coming out of Egypt to the time of Amos. Danæus.

27. Therefore will I cause you to go &c.] That is, Because of the little sincerity and devotion, with which your forefathers formerly performed their sacrifices to Me, and with which you perform them at present. The Prophets often upbraid the Jews with the sins of their forefathers, and threaten them with remarkable judgments on that account, when their posterity continue in the same or worse impieties. See Hos. ix. 9, 10; x. 9. Compare Matt. xxiii. 35. W. Lowth.

——beyond Damascus,] To which city it seems probable that Hazael carried many captives, 2 Kings x. 32, 33. But now the Israelites were to be led away captives into Assyria and Media, 2 Kings xv. 29; xvii. 6. Abp. Newcome.

Chap. VI. ver. 1.—which are named chief of the nations, &c.] Sion or Jerusalem, and Samaria, are the chief seats of the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel, whither is the greatest resort of the whole nation. The word rendered "nations" usually signifies the heathens, but sometimes denotes the Jews. W. Lowth. Others refer this passage to the nobles, wise, and great men, of every place: men that were heads among their own people. Poole.

2. — Calneh, — Hamath — Gath] Calneh was a city in the region of Babylon, Gen. x. 10; and, as it seems, lately subdued by the Assyrians. Hamath was a Syrian city on the Orontes. It was conquered by Jeroboam, 2 Kings xiv. 25; and by the Assyrians, 2 Kings xix. 13. "Gath of the Philistines" was taken by Uzziah, in whose reign Amos prophesied, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6. Abp. Newcome.

5. — like David;] Abusing his holy example, in applying to purposes of wantonness and riot what he consecrated and dedicated to God. It is the abuse of musick which is here condemned. Danæus.

6. That drink wine in bowls,] The Prophet alludes, either to the quantity drunk, or more probably to the magnificence of the drinking vessel. Harmer.

—— they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph.] They do not humble themselves under God's afflicting hand, nor lay to heart the miseries the Divine judgments have brought upon the kingdom of "Israel," called by the name "Joseph," and "the house of Joseph," chap. v. 6, 15. W. Lowth.

Wine, and musick, and gorgeous apparel, and delicate fare, are things which God in His goodness hath created, and given to the children of men for their comfort; and they may use them lawfully, and take comfort in them as their portion: but he that shall use any of them intemperately, or unseasonably, or vainly, or wastefully, abuseth both them and himself. And therefore we shall often find both the things themselves condemned, and those that used them blamed, in the Scriptures. Besides the text, see Isai. iii. 18—23; Luke xvi. 19; vi. 25. And yet none of all the things, here condemned, were or are in themselves unlawful: it was the excess only, or other disorder in the use of them, that made them obnoxious to reproof. In many things of this sort we may easily err, in point either of judgment, or of practice, or of both, if we do not wisely distinguish the use from the abuse. Often, because the abuses are common and great, we peevishly condemn in others the very use of some lawful things. Often again, because there is evidently a lawful use of the things, we impudently justify ourselves in the very abuse of them. In the former case we infringe our brethren's liberty; in the latter we pollute our own. The best and safest way for us in all indifferent things is this: to be indulgent to others, but strict to ourselves: in allowing them their liberty with the most, but taking our own liberty ever with the least. Bp. Sanderson.

8. — I abhor the excellency of Jacob,] Whatever the kingdoms of Israel and Judah value themselves for, is hateful to Me, as having been abused by them, and made instrumental in dishonouring Me. W. Lowth.

9. — if there remain ten men in one house, that they shall die.] Those that escape the hands of the enemy, shall die by pestilence or famine during the siege. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

10. And a man's uncle shall take him up, &c.] A man shall not have a brother or a son left, to do him the last offices of his burial; but if his uncle or his kinsman shall undertake to bring out his corpse, he that is the overseer of these funeral rites, joining with him in that work, shall say to that one which is left alive in the house, Is there any one remaining of the whole number of the family? and he shall say, No. Then shall the other answer again, Rest thou humbly and silently in the just pleasure of the Almighty: this is His work: as for us, our sins have been so grievous, that in conscience thereof, it is not for us to call on the name of the Lord for a release or mitigation of His judgment. Bp. Hall.

11. — the great house &c.] Universal ruin shall be spread through the city by the enemy. Or the earthquake may be alluded to. Abp. Newcome.

12. Shall horses run upon the rock? &c.] Is it possible, that horses should run upon the steep and craggy cliffs? or can it be, that the husbandman should drive his plough through those hard rocks? so impossible is it, that ye Israelites should continue to prosper while ye remain thus sinful; for ye have corrupted judgment and justice, and made it hateful and deadly to the innocent. Bp. Hall. See Bp. Lowth's note on Isai. v. 28.

6 The LORD repented for this: This also shall not be, saith the Lord GOD.

7 ¶ Thus he shewed me: and, behold, the LORD stood upon a wall made by a plumbline, with a plumbline in his hand.

8 And the LORD said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, A plumbline. Then said the Lord, Behold, I will set a plumbline in the midst of my people Israel: I will not again pass by them any more:

9 And the high places of Isaac shall be desolate, and the sanctuaries of Israel shall be laid waste; and I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword.

10 ¶ Then Amaziah the priest of Beth-el —— horns] That is, dominion. See the notes on 1 Sam. ii. 1.

14. — I will raise up against you a nation] That is, the Assyrians, who should afflict them from one end of the land to the other. "The entering in of Hamath" was the northern border of their country; and "the river of the wilderness" is the same with "the river of Egypt," the boundary of Judea on the south, Gen. xv. 18. W. Lowth.

The sins here described, as especially provoking God's indignation, are, First, the injustice and violence committed by the rich and great: Secondly, A sensual and voluptuous life, high living, the love of pleasure and diversions, and pride: Thirdly, Insensibility under God's corrections and the examples of His wrath. These were the sins for which the Jews perished, and which bring down His vengeance upon such as are guilty of them. We ought therefore most carefully to avoid them. To this end let us consider, that these sins not only expose men to temporal punishments, but make them subject still more unavoidably to the punishments of the world to come; and that injustice, a love of pleasures, impenitence, and incorrigibleness, are still more displeasing to God in Christians, than they were in the Jews; because the Gospel does so expressly command, and by the most powerful motives engage us, to renounce the desires of the flesh, and to live in charity, temperance, and humility. Ostervald.

Chap. VII. ver. 1. — after the king's mowings.] Or, "feedings:" agreeably to the remark of Mr. Stuart, that in general they mow not their grass, to make hay, as we do; but cut it off the ground, either green or withered, as they have occasion to use it. Harmer, Fragments to Calmet.

3. The Lord repented for this: &c.] To affect the mind of the Prophet, and by him that of the people, God displays different judgments, and shews His clemency by forbearing to execute them upon the intercession of Amos: it being His sole intention to represent these modes of punishment, and not to inflict them. Abp. Newcome.

4. — behold, the Lord God called to contend by fire, &c.] The second vision represents a more furious enemy, that consumed all before him, like a flaming fire, an element that hath no mercy. Dr. Stokes.

7, 8. — the Lord stood upon a wall made by a plumbline,] God's judgments are sometimes represented by a "line" and a "plummet," to denote that they are measured out by the exactest rules of justice: see 2 Kings xxi. 13; Isai. xxviii. 17. The instruments which are designed for building are sometimes used to mark out those places, which are to be pulled down and destroyed: see 2 Sam. viii. 2; Isai. xxxiv. 11; Lam. ii. 8. The vision imports, that as God formerly built up His people, He would now pluck them down and destroy them. See Jer. i. 10; xxxi. 28. W. Lowth.

8. — Amos, what seest thou?] This is said to excite the Prophet's attention. Abp. Newcome.

—— I will not again pass by them any more:] I will not any more pardon and pass by their wickedness. Bp. Hall. In this third vision the Prophet is informed, that now God Himself examines and tries the doings of the Israelites according to the exact or perfect rule of His justice, as prescribed to them in His law; and that He will give sentence upon them according to this rule, and not according to the mildness and gentleness of His mercy, which he had before exercised towards them, but which they had abused by becoming worse instead of better. Now therefore He will no more pardon and pass over them, but will call all things to a just account, as carpenters and builders are accustomed to try and examine all things by line and by level. Danæus.

9. And the high places &c.] "The high places of Isaac" were the altar and grove at Beer-sheba, where Isaac dwelt and built an altar, Gen. xxvi. 25; xlvi. 1: this place was afterwards abused to idolatry, chap. v. 5. "The sanctuaries of Israel" were the places set apart for idolatrous worship, such as Beth-el, Gilgal, and Beer-sheba, chap. iii. 14; v. 5. The word "sanctuary" is used for an idolatrous temple, Isai. xvi. 12. W. Lowth.

—— I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword.] This was fulfilled when Shallum conspired against Zachariah the son of Jeroboam, and slew him, 2 Kings xv. 10: he was the last that reigned of that family. W. Lowth.

sent to Jeroboam king of Israel, saying, Amos hath conspired against thee in the midst of the house of Israel: the land is not able to bear all his words.

11 For thus Amos saith, Jeroboam shall die by the sword, and Israel shall surely be led away captive out of their own land.

12 Also Amaziah said unto Amos, O thou seer, go, flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and prophesy there:

13 But prophesy not again any more at Beth-el: for it is the king's ‖ chapel, and it is the † king's court.

14 ¶ Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was an herdman, and a gatherer of ‖ sycomore fruit:

‖ Or, wild figs.

15 And the LORD took me † as I followed the flock, and the LORD said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel.

† Heb. from behind.

16 ¶ Now therefore hear thou the word of the LORD: Thou sayest, Prophesy not against Israel, [a] and drop not thy word against the house of Isaac.

[a] Ezek. 21. 2.

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Thy wife shall be an harlot in the city, and thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword, and thy land shall be divided by line; and thou shalt die in a polluted land: and Israel shall surely go into captivity forth of his land.

—— Amos hath conspired against thee in the midst of the house of Israel:] That is, in Beth-el, where is the greatest confluence of thy subjects. Bp. Hall.

11. — Jeroboam shall die by the sword,] This was a plain perverting of the Prophet's words; for he did not prophesy against the king himself, but against his family and posterity. W. Lowth.

12, 13. Also Amaziah said unto Amos, O thou seer, &c.] Retire home to thy own country of Judah, and there maintain thyself, and there bestow thy pains and admonitions; but venture not any more to vent thy prophecies in Beth-el; for thou knowest the condition of this place; it is both the king's sanctuary for his devotion, and the king's court for state; meddle not any more with prophesying here, lest thou provoke the king's anger against thee. Bp. Hall.

14. — I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son;] I was not a Prophet by profession, nor bred up in the schools of the Prophets, as usually were those who took the prophetical office upon them. See 2 Kings ii. 5, &c.; iv. 38; vi. 1. W. Lowth. Amos says, that he had no pretensions to the office or title of a Prophet by birth, succession, or education; but since it had pleased God to lay upon him, by a special commission, the necessity of prophesying, he must obey the Divine call rather than the command of the king. Dr. Stokes.

—— sycomore fruit:] A sort of wild fig, called by some the Egyptian fig. W. Lowth. See the note on 1 Kings x. 27.

15. And the Lord took me as I followed the flock,] Thus he was taken to the office of a Prophet, as David had been to that of a king: see Ps. lxxviii. 70, 71. Danæus. And as Moses also had been before him. See the note on Exod. iii. 1.

16. — drop not thy word &c.] Do not let fall the menaces of judgment upon the chosen people of God. Bp. Hall.

17. — Thy wife shall be an harlot in the city,] When Beth-el shall be taken by the Assyrians, (see Hos. x. 5, 6,) the soldiers shall abuse thy wife, and treat her as a common prostitute; as a just punishment of her idolatry, which is spiritual whoredom: "thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword" of the Assyrians, as a recompense for thy infidelity concerning My prophecy, that the house of Jeroboam shall fall by the sword, ver. 9; "thy land shall be divided by" measuring it, as usual, with a "line" or cord, among those to whom the king of Assyria shall give it, as a suitable punishment for thy contradiction of My prophecy concerning the conquest of this kingdom by the Assyrians: "and thou shalt die in a polluted land," or in a land where idolatry prevails, and where it will be impossible to converse without committing legal impurity, because thou hast been instrumental in keeping the people of Israel in idolatry, whereby this kingdom is polluted: and the people of "Israel shall surely go into captivity forth of his land," because they have hearkened unto thee rather than unto God, speaking to them by His Prophets. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth.

Chap. VIII. ver. 1, 2. — behold a basket of summer fruit. &c.] The basket of ripe summer fruit which Amos saw in this fourth vision, was to denote that Israel's sins were now ripe for judgment; as the time of judgment is elsewhere expressed by an harvest or a vintage. See Joel iii. 13. The two Hebrew words for "summer fruit" and "an end" have an affinity in sound, which gives occasion to a play on the words not unusual in Scripture. W. Lowth. See Jer. i. 11, and the note there.

3. And the songs of the temple shall be howlings in that day,] Instead of the songs and musick of the temples of Beth-el and other high places, there shall be nothing but howlings and shriekings of those that are slain. Bp. Hall.

5. Saying, When will the new moon be gone,] When shall we have done with these solemn feasts, wherein we are not allowed to buy and sell? would God these new moons and sabbaths were once past, that we might sell our corn at a high rate; making the measure of the wheat small, and the weights, wherewith the silver is weighed, great and heavy; and falsifying the balances by deceit.

Before CHRIST 787.

6 That we may buy the poor for [a] silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes; yea, and sell the refuse of the wheat?

[a] Chap. 2. 6.

7 The LORD hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely I will never forget any of their works.

8 Shall not the land tremble for this, and every one mourn that dwelleth therein? and it shall rise up wholly as a flood; and it shall be cast out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt.

791. 9 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord GOD, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day:

10 And I will turn your feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation; and I will bring up sackcloth upon all loins, and baldness upon every head; and I will make it as the mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day.

Before CHRIST 787.

11 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the Lord GOD, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the LORD:

12 And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the LORD, and shall not find it.

13 In that day shall the fair virgins and young men faint for thirst.

14 They that swear by the sin of Samaria, and say, Thy god, O Dan, liveth; and, The manner of Beer-sheba liveth; even they shall fall, and never rise up again.

CHAP. IX.

I SAW the LORD standing upon the altar: and he said, Smite the ‖ lintel of the door, that the posts may shake: and ‖ cut

‖ Or, chapiter, or, knop.

‖ Or, wound them.

Bp. Hall. That is, in plain terms, they had rather be defrauding neighbours, than serving God. Bp. Beveridge.

The "ephah" was the measure, wherewith they sold, containing about one of our bushels: this they made smaller than the just standard. The "shekel" was the money they received as the price for their goods: by "falsifying the balances" when they weighed it, and so requiring it to be greater than it should be according to the standard weight of a shekel, they diminished its just value. So in both ways they overreached those who dealt with them. See Mic. vi. 11. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth.

6. That we may buy the poor for silver, &c.] That we may cause the poor to sell themselves to our servitude for a little silver, as being not able to sustain themselves; and that we may buy the needy for a pair of shoes, even for the basest necessaries: yea, and that, by this means, we may put off at an unreasonable rate the very refuse and offal of the wheat. Bp. Hall.

7. The Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob,] That is, by Jacob's most eminent and incommunicable One, or by Jacob's holy One: see chap. iv. 2. Jos. Mede. By Himself, who is truly the glory of Jacob or Israel, see Ps. lxviii. 34: whatever other excellency or advantage they may make the subject of their glory. See chap. vi. 8. W. Lowth.

8. — it shall rise up wholly as a flood;] This deluge of sin in the nation shall make her punishment overflow, and overwhelm her in every part. Dr. Stokes.

—— it shall be cast out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt.] Or rather, the river of Egypt. The inhabitants of the land shall be cast out of their possessions, or the land itself shall be swallowed up by the invading Assyrians, as Egypt is by the inundation of the river Nile. W. Lowth.

9. — I will cause the sun to go down at noon,] Your sorrow shall be so extreme in that day, and that day shall be to you so black and gloomy, as if the sun were gone down at noonday, and as if darkness had covered the earth in the clearest day. Bp. Hall. Calamitous times are expressed by the failing of the light of the sun, and the day's being overspread with darkness. See Isai. xiii. 10; lix. 9, 10; Jer. xv. 9; Job v. 14; xxii. 11. W. Lowth.

11. — I will send a famine in the land, &c.] Not a famine of material bread, &c, but a spiritual famine of the word of God, which alone is able to feed and save your souls. Bp. Hall. It was usual among the Jews to resort to the Prophets for counsel under any difficulty. See chap. ii. 11; Ezek. xiv. 7; xx. 1. Amos tells them, that in a little time there will be no Prophets for them to consult; and this shall be a just punishment for their despising the former Prophets, and their instructions. This was fulfilled upon the whole nation at the time of the Babylonish captivity: see Lam. ii. 9; Ps. lxxiv. 9; Ezek. vii. 26. And after their return from captivity they had no succession of Prophets, from the time of Malachi till the coming of Christ. See 1 Mac. iv. 46; ix. 27. W. Lowth.

12. — from sea to sea, &c.] That is, from the east sea, namely, either the sea of Galilee, or the salt sea, to the west, or Mediterranean sea; and "from the north even to the east" again; that is, all through the kingdom. Dr. Wells.

13. In that day shall the fair virgins and young men faint for thirst.] They who are in the bloom of their youth, and in the strength of their age, shall faint and be dispirited, like those that want necessary refreshment. Compare Jer. xlviii. 18. W. Lowth.

14. They that swear by the sin of Samaria, &c.] Those idolatrous Israelites, that swear by the molten images of Samaria, and say, As the god which is worshipped in Dan, and the author of the religion of Beer-sheba liveth; even they shall fall into utter perdition, and never rise again. Bp. Hall.

"The sin of Samaria" was the calf, set up at Beth-el by Jeroboam, who committed a great sin in so doing, and made Israel to sin, 1 Kings xii. 30; xiv. 16: compare Mic. i. 5. "The manner," or way, "of Beer-sheba" is rendered "the god of Beer-sheba" in the Greek version, which expresses the sense rather than the words. The "way" or "manner," signifies the same with "the way of worship:" in this sense it is probably taken, Hos. x. 13; and the phrase is often used so in the Acts; particularly chap. xix. 23; xxiv. 14. Here it is taken figuratively for the god or object of their worship. Beer-sheba was a place noted for idolatry, as hath been observed upon chap. v. 5. W. Lowth.

The punishment, which is here threatened upon the people for their sins, is, that God would "send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord." Let us learn hence, that the most terrible chastisement God can inflict upon a people is to deprive them of His word, and no longer to send His faithful servants among them: and therefore, that those, who enjoy these precious advantages, ought to esteem them above all things, and make a good use of them, lest they be deprived of them by the just judgment of God. Ostervald.

Chap. IX. The Prophet sees a fifth vision, representing the final destruction of the kingdom of Israel; but he concludes his prophecy with promises of restoring the kingdom of David, and the Jewish nations under the Messias, when the Church shall be enlarged by the Gentiles coming into it. W. Lowth.

a severe blow was by the Divine command to be inflicted on those who were thought to be most eminent, and most able to support and give aid to the temple and the whole nation to whom it belonged. Dr. Stokes.

—— and cut them in the head, all of them;] That is, I will destroy all the chief of the kingdom of Israel. Dr. Wells. The "head" corresponds to the "lintel" in the foregoing clause. Abp. Newcome. As if he had said, Let them that are in the highest place, the guides and governours of the people, have the first and greatest blow, that in them others may see their doom. And after that, "I will slay the last of them" also, the lowest of the people, "with the sword" of a cruel enemy. Dr. Stokes.

2. Though they dig into hell, &c.] Though they hide themselves in the deepest holes or caverns of the earth, (see Isai. ii. 19;) or take refuge in the highest fortresses, they shall not escape My vengeance. W. Lowth.

3. —the serpent,] The word is used for a water-animal, Isai. xxvii. 1; and appears to be here used for some carnivorous fish. W. Lowth.

The general meaning of these verses is, that whatever places of refuge the Israelites may seek, their attempts at hiding themselves shall be ineffectual: for the hand of God, which is every where present, will draw them from thence, and give them over to their enemies. Danæus.

6. It is he that buildeth his stories in the heaven,] An awful description of God's irresistible power, discovering itself in the works of the creation, particularly in His appointing several regions of the air, as so many apartments that lead to the highest heavens, the seat of His own glory. See Ps. civ. 3. W. Lowth.

—— and hath founded his troop in the earth;] The old English translation hath rendered the sense very perspicuously thus: "And hath laid the foundation of His globe of elements in the earth." The word, rendered "troop," signifies the collection of elements and other creatures, which furnish the earth, expressed by a word, which we render "the host," Gen. ii. 1. W. Lowth.

7. Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, &c.] Is there any reason in you, O ye children of Israel, why I should respect you more than the very Ethiopians? Why should I make any difference betwixt you and the very Philistines? If you say that I brought up Israel out of Egypt, so also did I bring the Philistines out of Caphtor, and the Syrians from Kir. Bp. Hall.

The sense seems to be, Trust not in your ancestors, who were so highly favoured by Me; your vices have made you vile in My sight. Trust not in My deliverance of you from the land of Egypt. Other nations have been transplanted into fertile countries, as well as you; and particularly your neighbouring enemies. Abp. Newcome.

8. —saving that I will not utterly destroy &c.] God still promises to preserve a remnant in the midst of His heaviest judgments, that He may perform to them the promises made to their fathers. See Jer. xxx. 11; Joel ii. 32; Rom. xi. 28, 29. W. Lowth.

9. —yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth.] I will mingle or scatter the Israelites among all nations, just as good and bad grain are mingled in a sieve; but will so order it that none of the good grain shall be lost, or fall to the ground. Compare Matt. iii. 12. W. Lowth.

11. In that day] When I come to make a remarkable difference between the good and the bad, ver. 9. W. Lowth.

—— the tabernacle of David] Under the figure of rebuilding a tabernacle, that was partly demolished by force, partly decayed with age, the Prophet foretells the restoring of the kingdom of David to one of his seed after it should be fallen into a very low condition, and the enlargement of his subjects in the room of those, who had shaken off their obedience. Bp. Chandler.

12. That they may possess the remnant of Edom, &c.] That My apostles and servants, and their successors, whom I shall use in the restoration of the Church, may take a kind of spiritual possession of the Gentiles in My name, (bringing them within the pale of the Church and fold of the great Shepherd of our souls;) even of the greatest enemies of the Church, as the Edomites were of the Jews: at least of a remnant of them, that is, so many as shall return by true repentance and obedience from their opposition to the truth. Dr. Stokes.

called by my name, saith the LORD that doeth this.

14 And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them.

Before CHRIST about 787.

15 And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the LORD thy God.

[g] Joel 3. 18.

—— saith the Lord that doeth this.] After the restoration of the Jews from their captivity, the Messiah came, and the Gentiles were admitted into His Church: and on the future grand restoration of the Jews, the borders of the Christian Church will be enlarged among the Gentiles, Rom. xi. 12, 15. Abp. Newcome.

13. — the plowman shall overtake the reaper, &c.] Rather, "the plowman shall meet the reaper;" that is, there shall be such an increase of the fruits of the earth, that as soon as the harvest is got in, it will be time to plow for the next year, which was not usual in those hot countries, where the corn was ripe early in the summer, in the month of May, or June at farthest. And "the treader of grapes" shall meet "him that soweth seed;" that is, the vintage shall be so plentiful, that whereas it used to begin in August, it shall not be over till seedtime, the earliest season of which was November. W. Lowth. It is a lively way of expressing, that the harvest and vintage should be copious and long in gathering. Abp. Newcome. And together with plenty of all outward blessings, it prefigures the abundance of God's spiritual graces, and the great harvest of the Church, of which our Saviour Himself speaks, Matt. ix. 37, in such figurative expressions as were familiar to the Oriental writers. Poole, Dr. Stokes.

—— the hills shall melt.] They shall flow, as it were, with the abundance of wine produced on them, Joel iii. 18. Mountains and hills are the proper places for vineyards. Abp. Newcome. See the note on Joel iii. 18.

15. — they shall no more be pulled up out of their land] But shall dwell in it secure from any annoyance of enemies. Compare Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxii. 41; Ezek. xxxiv. 28; Joel iii. 20; Mic. iv. 4; Zeph. iii. 13. W. Lowth.

We have here a prophecy, that the ruin of the house and kingdom of David should precede the coming of the Messiah; who should at His coming repair the breaches thereof, and build it again. The captivity of Zedekiah by the Chaldees perfected the fall of David's kingdom, which could not rise before the return from that captivity, and was to rise, as seems to be implied, before a new captivity began. After the Babylonian captivity was over, none of David's race was in any account. Edom was not "possest" by any of Zorobabel's descendants, nor were "the heathen called by God's name" through their means; till God gave unto Jesus the throne of His father David, and for the suffering of death exalted Him to His right hand, to be a Saviour and a Prince. His coming was "for the fall and rising again of many in Israel," and by the preaching of His Apostles the Gentiles were converted, and made part of His kingdom, out of which the Jews had excluded themselves. But "the days come," when this shall appear to be more visibly the kingdom of David, by the coming of the body of the Jews into it, and probably by His literally "planting them" again in their "land," as His principal subjects, from whence they shall be no more ejected. Bp. Chandler.

OBADIAH.

INTRODUCTION.

THIS Prophet hath furnished us with no particulars of his own origin or life, any more than of the period in which he was favoured by the Divine revelations. That he received a commission to prophesy is evident; as well from the admission of his work into the sacred canon, as from the completion of those predictions which he delivered.

It is probable that he flourished about the same time with Ezekiel and Jeremiah; and the best opinions concur in supposing him to have prophesied a little after the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, which happened about the year of the world 3416. He predicted therefore the same circumstances which those Prophets had foretold against the Edomites, who had upon many occasions favoured the enemies of Judah; and who, when "strangers carried their forces away captive, and foreigners cast lots upon Jerusalem," had rejoiced at the destruction, and insulted the children of Judah in their affliction, ver. 11—14; Ps. cxxxvii. 7.

The Prophet, after describing the pride and cruelty of the Edomites, declares that though they dwelt in fancied security among the clefts of the rocks, yet the "men of Teman should be dismayed," and "every one of the mount of Esau should be cut off by slaughter;" and that the men who had confederated with them against Jacob, and been supported by them as their allies, should inflict the punishment of their malevolence. The Prophet concludes with consolatory assurances of future restoration and prosperity to the Jews, to whom should arise deliverance from Zion: saviours who should judge the nations; and a spiritual kingdom, appropriated and consecrated to the Lord.

The Prophet's work is short, but composed with much beauty: it unfolds a very interesting scene of prophecy, and an instructive lesson against human confidence and malicious exultation. Dr. Gray.

[g] 1 Tim. 4. 16. Jam. 5. 20.

[h] Luke 1. 33.

12. — thou shouldest not have looked on the day of thy brother] Thou oughtest not to have taken pleasure at the sight of thy brother's calamity. So the expression of "looking upon an enemy" signifies the beholding his fall with satisfaction, Ps. liv. 7; lix. 10; xcii. 11; cxii. 8. Compare Micah iv. 11; vii. 10. W. Lowth.

16. For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, &c.] As you of Edom shall drink of the cup of My indignation upon, or rather because of, My holy mountain, and the holy land of Judea, which you have persecuted, so shall all those nations, that joined with you in your offences, ever taste of the same cup, till they have drunk it up, and be as if they had never been. Dr. Stokes.

17. But upon mount Zion shall be deliverance, &c.] This was remarkably verified at the first preaching of the Gospel, when God's law came forth from Zion, Isai. ii. 3; Joel ii. 32; Ps. cx. 2. W. Lowth.

18. And the house of Jacob shall be a fire, &c.] This was fulfilled in part by Hyrcanus and the Maccabees, 1 Mac. v. 3: but was to be accomplished more fully in a mystical sense by the destruction of the enemies of the Church. Poole.

19. And they of the south &c.] Edom lay to the south; the Philistines to the west; Ephraim to the north; and Gilead to the east. Abp. Newcome. These words import the conquests of the Jews over their idolatrous neighbours in every direction. W. Lowth. Or, the enlargement of the Church of Christ in the times of the Gospel. Poole.

20. — the captivity of Jerusalem, which is in Sepharad, shall possess the cities of the south.] Others translate the passage, as in the margin, "The captivity of Jerusalem shall possess that which is in Sepharad, and the cities of the south." If the word be taken as an appellative, it signifies a border, and may denote that part of Arabia which bordereth upon the south of Judea, or the "cities of the south," here mentioned. W. Lowth.

21. And saviours shall come up on mount Zion &c.] By "saviours" may be understood the leaders of the Jews, who should fight their battles, and vanquish their enemies, denoted by the inhabitants of the "mount of Esau." In this sense the word "saviour" is taken, Judg. iii. 9; Isai. xix. 20. Or we may understand the word in a spiritual sense, for the preachers of salvation, whose office it is to convert unbelievers and "aliens to the commonwealth of Israel." Compare ver. 17, and Amos ix. 12. W. Lowth.

JONAH.

INTRODUCTION.

THOUGH Jonah be placed fifth in the order of the Minor Prophets, he is generally considered as the most ancient of all the Prophets whose writings we possess, not excepting Hosea. Jonah was the son of Amittai, of the tribe of Zabulon; and was born at Gath-hepher, in that tribe: see 2 Kings xiv. 25; Josh. xix. 13. St. Jerome informs us, that the Prophet's sepulchre was shewn there in his time; and there the natives still believe it to exist.

Jonah is generally supposed to have flourished in the reigns of Joash and Jeroboam the Second, kings of Israel; the former of whom began to reign in the year of the world 3163, the latter died in the year of the world 3220.

Among other testimonies given to the prophetick character of Jonah, may be reckoned that of Tobit, who professed a firm confidence in the accomplishment of Jonah's prediction against Nineveh, and whose son, indeed, afterwards lived to witness its completion, Tobit xiv. 4—6, 15. The sacred writers likewise, and our Lord Himself, speak of him as a Prophet of considerable eminence; 2 Kings xiv. 25; Matt. xii. 39, 41; xvi. 4; Luke xi. 29; see also 2 Esdras i. 39.

The style of Jonah is narrative and simple; the beautiful prayer contained in the second chapter has been justly admired. The book furnishes us with a fine description of the power and mercies of God. Dr. Gray.

Before CHRIST about 862.

CHAP. I.

1 Jonah, sent to Nineveh, fleeth to Tarshish. 4 He is bewrayed by a tempest, 11 thrown into the sea, 17 and swallowed by a fish.

NOW the word of the LORD came unto ‖ Jonah the son of Amittai, saying,

2 Arise, go to Nineveh, that [a] great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up before me.

[a] Gen. 10. 11, 12. ch. 3. 3.

3 But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD, and went down to Joppa; and he found a ship going to Tarshish: so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD.

† Heb. cast forth.

4 ¶ But the LORD † sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship † was like to be broken.

Before CHRIST about 862.

† Heb. thought to be broken.

5 Then the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them. But Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship; and he lay, and was fast asleep.

6 So the shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, What meanest thou, O sleeper? arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not.

7 And they said every one to his fellow, Come, and let us cast lots, that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us. So they cast lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah.

8 Then said they unto him, Tell us, we

Chap. I. ver. 2. Arise, &c.] Arise, go to Nineveh, the great city of the Assyrians, and denounce My judgments against it, for their wickedness is grown to that height, that I can no longer forbear it. Bp. Hall.

3. But Jonah rose up to flee] Jonah might consider this mission as an uncommon, unprofitable, and dangerous one. He certainly thought that his veracity as a Prophet would be affected by God's merciful change of purpose, chap. iv. 2. This and other parts of his conduct deserve censure. But men endued with extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, and made the instruments of declaring God's will to mankind, have occasionally been subject to great human infirmities, and have even contracted great guilt. See 1 Kings xiii. 18, 20; Matt. vii. 22; Acts xv. 39; 1 Cor. xiii. 2; Gal. ii. 11. Abp. Newcome.

—— Tarshish] See note at 1 Kings x. 22. It is probable that there were more places than one named Tarshish. The greater part of learned persons have judged that the place here meant was Tartessus upon the river Bætis in Spain; and, if Jonah thought to secure himself by distance from the presence of the Lord, he could not have a place more proper for his purpose, as it was one of the most remote in the then known world. Bryant.

—— from the presence of the Lord.] That is, from the place where God usually had shown Himself present by revealing His word and will to His Prophets. Perhaps he might think that God would not insist upon the execution of His commission, when he was in a strange country, where were no Prophets nor prophetick impulses. Poole.

5. — into the sides of the ship;] The word, rendered "ship," is expressed by a different word in this and the two immediately preceding verses. It seems to denote a roofed or ceiled room or cabin in the ship, to the sides of which conveniences, something like the mangers in stables, might be fixed for the sailors to lie down in. Parkhurst.

7. — and the lot fell upon Jonah.] By the special appointment of Providence, and in pursuance of His designs. Danæus.

pray thee, for whose cause this evil is upon us; What is thine occupation? and whence comest thou? what is thy country? and of what people art thou?

9 And he said unto them, I am an Hebrew; and I fear the LORD, the God of heaven, which hath made the sea and the dry land.

† Heb. with great fear.

10 Then were the men † exceedingly afraid, and said unto him, Why hast thou done this? For the men knew that he fled from the presence of the LORD, because he had told them.

† Heb. may be silent from us? ‖ Or, grew more and more tempestuous.

11 ¶ Then said they unto him, What shall we do unto thee, that the sea † may be calm unto us? for the sea ‖ † wrought, and was tempestuous.

† Heb. went.

12 And he said unto them, Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea; so shall the sea be calm unto you: for I know that for my sake this great tempest is upon you.

† Heb. digged.

13 Nevertheless the men † rowed hard to bring it to the land; but they could not: for the sea wrought, and was tempestuous against them.

Before CHRIST about 862.

14 Wherefore they cried unto the LORD, and said, We beseech thee, O LORD, we beseech thee, let us not perish for this man's life, and lay not upon us innocent blood: for thou, O LORD, hast done as it pleased thee.

† Heb. stood.

15 So they took up Jonah, and cast him forth into the sea: and the sea † ceased from her raging.

† Heb. sacrificed a sacrifice unto the LORD, and vowed vows.

16 Then the men feared the LORD exceedingly, and † offered a sacrifice unto the LORD, and made vows.

[b] Matt. 12. 40. & 16. 4. Luke 11. 30.

17 ¶ Now the LORD had prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah. And [b] Jonah was in the † belly of the fish three days and three nights.

† Heb. bowels.

CHAP. II.

1 The prayer of Jonah. 10 He is delivered from the fish.

THEN Jonah prayed unto the LORD his God out of the fish's belly,

[a] Ps. 120. 1. ‖ Or, out of mine affliction.

2 And said, I [a] cried ‖ by reason of mine affliction unto the LORD, and he heard me;

---

9. —I fear the Lord, the God of heaven,] Rather, Jehovah, the God of heaven: Jehovah being the peculiar name by which the true God was distinguished from the gods and lords of the heathens. W. Lowth.

10. Then were the men exceedingly afraid, &c.] Then, when Jonah had told the men both his nation, and his religion, and his profession, and his heinous sin in fleeing from the charge that God had laid upon him, they were exceedingly afraid: as being stricken with the sense both of their own danger and of compassion towards a person of such quality, who had so freely confessed himself and his offence. Bp. Hall.

12. —for I know that for my sake &c.] He was convinced by the nature of the calamity, and by the lot having pointed him out, (ver. 7,) that all the evil proceeded from him, and he was impelled by Heaven to make this salutary proposal, that the whole might not perish. Bryant.

14. Wherefore they cried unto the Lord, &c.] They were convinced, by Jonah's account of himself, that the God whom he worshipped, ver. 9, had brought this tempest upon them. So they made their petitions to Him. W. Lowth.

—— lay not upon us innocent blood:] Punish us not as murderers of an innocent man; for we judge from the whole transaction that we are conforming ourselves to Thy will. Abp. Newcome.

16. Then the men feared the Lord &c.] They were convinced of the power and greatness of that God, whom Jonah worshipped; which appeared both in raising this storm, and in so suddenly laying it: and accordingly they "offered a sacrifice unto the Lord, and made vows," or, as the words may be more plainly translated, they "offered sacrifices unto the Lord, that is, they made vows" to do it at the first opportunity. W. Lowth.

The miracle of preserving Jonah served to spread the knowledge of Jehovah. The whole transaction had this tendency, ver. 16; and it also taught Jonah, and in him the whole prophetical order, God's power and determination to enforce His commands. Abp. Newcome.

17. Now the Lord had prepared &c.] The second chapter would have more properly begun here, as it does in the Oriental versions. Dr. Wells.

—— Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights.] The Hebrew language has no word to express what we call a natural day; what therefore the Greeks express by a word, which literally rendered means night-day, they denote by "a day and a night." Therefore the space of time consisting of one whole revolution of twenty-four hours, and part of two others, is fitly expressed in that language by "three days and three nights." Such a space of time our Lord lay in the grave: and Jonah, who was an eminent figure of Him in this particular, was probably no longer in the fish's belly. W. Lowth.

As the things, which befell the Church at large, happened to them for ensamples to the whole congregation of Christian people; so the things, which befell the Prophets of old, happened for ensamples of the Saviour Himself: that His character and history, as the true Son of God who should come into the world, might be infallibly ascertained and demonstrated by a comparison with the various characters of those who had been most eminent in the Church of old. This consideration will reconcile us to some strange things, which might appear very unreasonable, if they were considered only in themselves. How monstrous would it seem in any other history, that a man should be buried in the body of a fish, and cast up alive again after three days upon the dry land! But if this strange thing happened, that it might afterwards be compared with the return of Jesus Christ from the dead for the salvation of all mankind, then the preservation of Jonah becomes fit and reasonable; it being of infinite importance to the world, that the fact of Christ's resurrection, when it should happen, should be admitted and believed: and so the case was worthy of the Divine interposition. Jonah was not preserved by a miracle for his own sake, but for a sign, to instruct the people of God in the truth of their salvation, and in the peculiar means or mode of it. Our Saviour Himself hath instructed us to make this use of Jonah's history, Matt. xii. 39, 40. Jones of Nayland.

Chap. II. ver. 1. Then Jonah prayed &c.] This prayer hath much more the appearance of a thanksgiving after a deliverance; and indeed could scarce be used before, whatever change be made in the tenses, unless we suppose it prophetical of the deliverance. Had it not been inserted in the history, many things in it would be understood metaphorically, as in the Psalms. Abp. Secker. It appears to be the prayer of Jonah, as he wrote it after he came out of the fish, but as he had conceived it before in the fish's belly. Danæus.

Hall.* The word rendered "hell" signifies the state of the dead. It may be most properly rendered the "grave" here, as in the margin: the belly of the fish was to Jonah as a grave. W. Lowth.

4. Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight; &c.] My first apprehensions were, that as I had justly forfeited Thy favour by my disobedience; so thou wouldest cast me out of Thy protection; see ver. 7, and compare Ps. xxxi. 22: yet upon recollecting myself, I thought it my duty not to despair of Thy mercy, but direct my prayer towards Thy heavenly habitation. See ver. 7. W. Lowth.

8. They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy.] They that trust in idols, often called by the names of "vanity" and "lies," (see Ps. xxxi. 6; Jer. x. 8; xvi. 19;) forsake Him, who alone is able to shew them mercy, and protect them in the time of danger. W. Lowth. In Ps. cxliv. 2, according to the marginal translation, the Psalmist calls God "his mercy," or the Author of mercy to him. See also Ps. lix. 10, 17. Abp. Newcome.

10. And the Lord spake unto the fish, &c.] God's almighty power is represented in Scripture as bringing things to pass by His bare will and command: see Gen. i. 3; Rom. iv. 17. W. Lowth. See also the note on Gen. i. 3.

The fish obeyeth and delivereth Jonah, that hereby we also may learn to obey God, and to acknowledge all things to be subject to His power, and to reverence and stand in awe of Him, and to worship and fear Him. Danæus.

Chap. III. ver. 3. —Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city of three days' journey.] Diodorus Siculus informs us, that Nineveh was 480 furlongs in compass, which makes sixty of our miles: so that it was bigger than Babylon, which, according to his account, was but forty-eight. Diodorus's account agrees with the description the Prophet gives us, that it was "three days' journey" in compass. Twenty miles was a day's journey in common computation for a foot-traveller. W. Lowth.

4, 5. And Jonah began to enter &c.] And when Jonah had spent one day in his preaching, and had gone through one third part of the city, crying, and saying, There are yet but forty days to come, ere Nineveh, except it repent, shall be destroyed; the people of Nineveh believed that word of God, delivered to them by His Prophet, &c. Bp. Hall.

The fame of the wonderful works, which God had wrought for the Jews, was spread over the Eastern parts of the world. This might make the Ninevites hearken to a man of that nation, that came to them as sent by God. And it is likely that he gave them an account of the miraculous circumstances which attended his own mission. But without question a sense of their own guilt, and their deserving whatever punishment Heaven could inflict, was a principal reason that moved them to have a regard to the Prophet's message. And by the men of Nineveh's repenting "at the preaching of Jonas," God designed to upbraid the stubbornness of His own people, and shame them, as it were, into repentance, for fear the men of "Nineveh should rise in judgment with them," as our Saviour speaks of the Israelites in His own time, Matt. xii. 41. W. Lowth.

4. —Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.] That is, unless it repent. In the whole course of Scripture, God's threatenings, and His promises also, have ever a condition annexed to them in His purpose: which condition, though it be not ever, indeed but seldom, expressed, yet is it ever included, and so to be understood. All God's promises, however absolutely expressed, are made on the condition of obedience: and all His threatenings, however absolutely expressed, on the condition of impenitence: See Jer. xviii. 8; Ezek. xxxiii. 11. When He says, Abimelech shall die for taking Sarah, understand it, unless he restore her; see Gen. xx. 3, 7: "Forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown," understand it with this reservation, unless they repent. The Ninevites understood it so; else it had been in vain for them to have repented at all, out of an hope of preventing the judgment by their repentance, as their speeches shew that they did. For "who can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from His fierce anger, that we perish not?" ver. 9. Bp. Sanderson.

CHAP. IV.

1 Jonah, repining at God's mercy, 4 is reproved by the type of a gourd.

BUT it displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry. Before CHRIST about 862.

2 And he prayed unto the LORD, and said, I pray thee, O LORD, was not this my saying, when I was yet in my country? Therefore I [a] fled before unto Tarshish: for I knew that thou art a [b] gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repentest thee of the evil.

prince to have been Pul, the king of Assyria, Nineveh being then the capital city of that empire. W. Lowth.

7. — neither man nor beast,] Abstaining for some time from our daily food signifies most naturally that we are unworthy of it, and can take no comfort in it, whilst we are under the Divine displeasure. And as anciently every thing of importance was denoted, especially in the Eastern countries, by actions as well as by words, this was probably the original purpose, for which men used fasting. And it was then sometimes extended to children and cattle, in token that the parents and owners of them had forfeited the dearest blessings and most valuable conveniences of life. See also Joel ii. 16; Judith iv. 10. Abp. Secker.

7. — taste any thing:] The Eastern mode of fasting was abstinence from food till the evening, 2 Sam. i. 12. Abp. Newcome.

8. — let — beast be covered with sackcloth,] In token of publick sorrow and humiliation. W. Lowth.

—— and cry mightily unto God: yea, let them turn &c.] Natural religion instructed them, that their earnest prayers without true amendment would not avail them before God: nor would their repentance be thought sincere, unless they restored to the true owners what they had gained by violence and injustice. W. Lowth.

10. — and God repented of the evil, &c.] See the note on ver. 4. A sincere and effectual repentance will stay God's hand, and infallibly turn Him from the fierceness of His anger: insomuch that after He had fixed and determined the very day for the destruction of Nineveh, yet as soon as "He saw their works, that they turned from their evil way," He presently "repented of the evil," &c. In this case God does not stand upon the reputation of His Prophet, by whom He had sent to them so peremptory a message; but His mercy breaks through all considerations, and rejoiceth against judgment: for He cannot find in His heart to ruin those, who by the terrour of His judgments will be brought to repentance. Abp. Tillotson.

This is ever God's manner, when men change their deeds, to change His doom; when they renounce their sins, to recall His sentence; when they repent of the evil they have done against Him, to "repent of the evil that He had said that He would do unto them." Search the Scriptures; and say if things run not thus, as in the most ordinary course; God commandeth, and man disobeyeth; man disobeyeth, and God threateneth; God threateneth, and man repenteth; man repenteth, and God forbeareth. Nineveh, prepare for desolation; for now but "forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown:" but Nineveh fasted, and prayed, and repented; and Nineveh stood after more than twice forty years. Generally, God never yet threatened any punishment upon person or place, but, if they repented, He either withheld it, or deferred it, or abated it, or sweetened it to them; for the most part proportionably to the truth and measure of their repentance, but always, so far as in His infinite wisdom He hath thought good, He hath remitted somewhat of the threatened severity and rigour. Bp. Sanderson.

Chap. IV. ver. 2. — I knew that thou art a gracious God, &c.] I knew by Thy declarations to Moses, (Exod. xxxiv. 6,) and by several instances of Thy mercy, that Thou dost not always execute the punishments which Thou threatenest against sinners. W. Lowth.

3. — better for me to die than to live.] Under the imputation of being a false prophet. W. Lowth.

4. Then said the Lord, Doest thou well to be angry?] Dost thou think this is a just cause for thee to be moved with anger, for that I have spared the Ninevites? Bp. Hall. Jonah seems to have thought, that his veracity as a Prophet, and the honour of his office, were affected. His impatience here, and at ver. 8, was highly reprehensible. Abp. Newcome.

5. So Jonah went out of the city,] Rather, Now Jonah had gone out of the city: for the particulars related in the foregoing verses happened after his departing out of the city, and sitting somewhere in view of it, expecting some extraordinary judgment should come upon it: but being disappointed, he broke out into that expostulation with God already mentioned. W. Lowth.

—— a booth,] The original word signifies an artificial covert, as a tent or booth; and also a natural one, as in Jer. xxv. 38; Job xxxviii. 40. Abp. Newcome.

The words, "the Lord prepared a gourd," may signify that He had prepared one. It is probable, that this gourd was the booth, under which Jonah sheltered himself from the heat: the perishing of which must of course have given him great pain, especially when we consider the intolerable heat of the country: which is so excessive, that Thevenot informs us he was prevented by it from going to visit the reputed tomb of Jonah on the east side of the Tigris. Harmer.

6. — a gourd,] It is not agreed among interpreters what particular plant is meant. Dr. Wells. Bochart and others suppose the Ricinus or Palma Christi to be meant: and the height of

7 But God prepared a worm when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd that it withered.

8 And it came to pass, when the sun did arise, that God prepared a ‖ vehement east wind; and the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die, and said, It is better for me to die than to live.

‖ Or, silent.

9 And God said to Jonah, ‖ Doest thou well to be angry for the gourd? And he said, ‖ I do well to be angry, even unto death.

‖ Or, Art thou greatly angry?

10 Then said the LORD, Thou hast ‖had pity on the gourd, for the which thou hast not laboured, neither madest it grow; which † came up in a night, and perished in a night:

‖ Or, I am greatly angry. ‖ Or, spared. † Heb. was the son of the night.

that plant, which is the same as that of the olive, the largeness of its leaves, which are like those of the vine, and the quickness of its growth, are said to favour this supposition. We may however justly attribute a miraculous growth to the plant which shaded Jonah. Abp. Newcome.

—— to deliver him from his grief.] That is, from the displeasure, which he had conceived, ver. 1: to abate the heat, and thus to ease his mind by easing his body. Or, to deliver him from his affliction, or distress, on account of the heat. Abp. Newcome.

—— So Jonah was exceeding glad of the gourd.] Take we heed, that we place not our felicity in the enjoyment, or please ourselves too much in the confidence, or allow ourselves overmuch freedom in the use, of any creature; lest as Jonah was overjoyed when the gourd sprang up, and overvexed when it withered, so the loss of what we overvalued while we had it, overwhelm us with grief and impatience, when we must part from it. Bp. Sanderson.

8. — a vehement east wind;] The winds in those hot countries, when they blow from the sandy deserts, are often more suffocating than the heat of the sun, and make the sunbeams give a more intense heat. The word, translated "vehement," signifies also "silent," as it is rendered in the margin. In that sense it denotes such a wind, as causes a small motion in the air, and makes it sultry hot. W. Lowth.

9. — And he said, I do well to be angry, even unto death.] And he said, in much weakness and rash passion, I have just cause to be angry, even to such a degree as to wish myself dead. The Prophet here records his own impatience, as Moses and other holy writers have done, without concealing any circumstance of it. Bp. Hall, W. Lowth.

10, 11. Then said the Lord, Thou hast had pity &c.] Then said the Lord, I have done this purposely to shew thee thine own errour and weakness: thou hadst pity on a sorry plant, which cost thee no labour, which received no life from thee, which suddenly came up, and suddenly vanished. And should not I spare Nineveh, that great city, wherein are sixscore thousand infants, that have not lived to offend, and much cattle, which are not capable of offence? How much are these better than the senseless plants of the earth! And these are the work of My hands, and have cost Me much care and regard, and such as require time and leisure for their perfection; bethink thyself therefore, how just reason I have to be angry at thy unmercifulness, which art angry at My forbearance of Nineveh. Bp. Hall.

—— Thou hast had pity on the gourd,] Jonah seems to have been grieved that so extraordinary and beautiful a plant perished; as well as for the loss of its shelter. Abp. Newcome.

11. — sixscore thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left] That is, infants, who "have no knowledge between good and evil," as it is expressed, Deut. i. 39; Isai. vii. 15, 16. If we compute these at a fifth part of the inhabitants, the city will have contained six hundred thousand persons. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

A great consideration with God, in His sending of publick calamities, is the multitude of the sufferers; and that not only the guilty, but the innocent also, without a special and miraculous Providence, must be involved in a common calamity. Abp. Tillotson.

—— and also much cattle?] In the large circuit of Nineveh, as in that of Babylon, space was probably left for cattle to feed. Abp. Newcome. God's providence extends its care to beasts as well as men; see Ps. xxxvi. 6; civ. 27, 28: so that He is willing to spare them, as well as the more noble parts of creation. W. Lowth. In this declaration of God's unwillingness to destroy Nineveh, that compassion of the Creator, which extends to the meanest rank of His creatures, is expressed with wonderful tenderness: and from this, in common with other considerations, it is not extravagant to imagine, that mankind are no less in proportion accountable for the ill use of their dominion over creatures of the lower rank of beings, than for the exercise of tyranny over their own species. Guardian.

MICAH.

INTRODUCTION.

MICAH was unquestionably the author of this Book; and he speaks in that character, chap. iii. 1, 8. He calls himself a Morasthite, chap. i. 1; and is supposed to have been a native of Morasthi, a village situated near the city of Eleutheropolis, in the southern part of Judah; a place distinguished by St. Jerome from Mareshah, mentioned in this book, chap. i. 15, and in Joshua, chap. xv. 44.

Micah speaks only of the kings of Judah; and he prophesied in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, contemporary with whom were Pekah and Hoshea, the two last kings of Israel. Micah then began to prophesy soon after Isaiah, Hosea, Joel, and Amos; and he prophesied between the year of the world 3246, when Jotham began to reign, and the year of the world 3305, when Hezekiah died: but probably not during the whole of that period.

Micah, who received the Divine revelations by vision, was appointed to preach both against Israel and Judah; and executed his commission with great animation and zeal. One of his predictions is related to have saved the life of Jeremiah; who under the reign of Jehoiakim would have been put to death for prophesying the destruction of the temple, had it not appeared that Micah had foretold the same thing under Hezekiah about one hundred years before, Mic. iii. 12. Micah is mentioned as a Prophet in the book of Jeremiah, chap. xxvi. 18, compared with Mic. iii. 12; and in the New Testament, Matt. ii. 5, and John vii. 42. He is imitated by succeeding Prophets, as he himself had borrowed the expressions of those who preceded, or flourished at the same time with him. Our Saviour Himself, indeed, condescended to speak in the language of the Prophet.

The Prophet predicted in clear terms the invasions of Shalmaneser and Sennacherib, and their triumph over Israel and Judah; the captivities, dispersion, and deliverance of Israel; the cessation of prophecy; the destruction of Assyria and of Babylon, the representatives of the enemies of the Christian Church; the birth of the Everlasting Ruler at Beth-lehem Ephratah; the establishment and exaltation of Christ's kingdom over all nations; the influence of the Gospel; and the destruction of Jerusalem, chap. iii. 12. Dr. Gray.

The style of Micah is nervous, concise, and elegant; often elevated and poetical, but sometimes obscure from sudden transitions of subject. The contrast of the neglected duties of justice, mercy, humility, and piety, with the punctilious observance of the ceremonial sacrifices, affords a beautiful example of the harmony which subsists between the Mosaick and the Christian dispensations, and shews that the Law partook, in some degree at least, of that spiritual nature, which more immediately characterizes the religion of Jesus. Bp. Tomline.

2. Hear, all ye people; hearken, O earth, and all that therein is:] By "people," may be understood either the people of those countries, or of all others: and so by "earth," either particularly that land, or the whole habitable world, and "the fulness thereof," that is, as it is well expressed, "all that therein is," all the inhabitants, that fill and occupy it. The people of that land are more peculiarly spoken to, and God's judgments are now particularly denounced against them: yet what is said or done is for an example to all other. Dr. Pocock.

—— and let the Lord God be witness against you,] I call Him to witness, that I have forewarned you of the judgments that hang over your heads, unless you speedily repent. And He Himself will become a witness against you, and convince you of your sins, in such a manner that you shall not be able to deny the charge. Compare Ps. l. 7; Mal. iii. 5. W. Lowth.

——from his holy temple.] Either from the temple at Jerusalem; or, as most generally understood, from Heaven, called His "temple," Ps. xi. 4, of which the earthly temple was a representation. Dr. Pocock. See Jonah ii. 4, and the note there.

3. — The Lord cometh forth out of his place,] God, who is every where present, is said more particularly to be there, where He more peculiarly exhibits His majesty and glory; and He is said to "come forth out of His place," and to "come down" to any other place, when He gives more apparent tokens of His presence by acts of mercy or judgment. Dr. Pocock.

5. For the transgression of Jacob is all this, &c.] And all these judgments shall be for the idolatries of Israel and Judah. What then, or who, is the author of this great sin of Israel? Is it not the mother city Samaria, whose princes have erected and maintained those golden calves? And who is the author of those offensive high places of Judah? Is not Jerusalem, and those her kings, who have set them up and countenanced them? Bp. Hall.

It is the case of most kingdoms, that they are much influenced by the spirit and genius of their principal cities. And so it was with the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, of which Samaria and Jerusalem were the respective heads. These two cities were two fountains of corruption, which infected all the surrounding countries. The transgression of Samaria was Baal and the golden calves; the transgression of Jerusalem was her high places, where idolatries were practised. Thus the Prophet lays his general charge: he will come to particulars presently. But he begins with religious abuses, because they are the spring and root of all other wickedness. Reading.

6. — as an heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard:] As a heap of stones laid together carelessly in the field, or as those hillocks of earth which are cast up for the planting of a vineyard. Bp. Hall.

7. — all the hires thereof] See Hosea ii. 12, where the idolatrous people are taxed for saying of their vines and fig trees, "These are my rewards" or hire, "that my lovers," that is, my idols, "have given me:" see also verses 5, and 8. Hence it appears, that by "hires," may be understood all their wealth and good things, which they looked on as the gifts of their idols, and the rewards of their idolatrous service. Dr. Pocock.

—— for she gathered it of the hire of an harlot, &c.] She imagines that she gaineth her wealth as a reward of her idolatry, and it shall "return," or be made a prey to idolatrous Assyrians. W. Lowth.

8. — like the dragons,] See the notes on Job xxx. 29; Lam. iv. 3.

—— mourning as the owls.] Or ostriches, for so the ancient interpreters generally render it. It is affirmed by travellers of good credit, that ostriches make a fearful screeching lamentable noise. Dr. Pocock. During the lonesome part of the night they often make a very doleful and hideous noise, as if they were in the greatest agonies: an action beautifully alluded to here. Dr. Shaw.

9. — he is come &c.] That is, the enemy: or, "it is come," namely, the evil condition spoken of. Dr. Pocock.

10. Declare ye it not at Gath, weep ye not at all:] See 2 Sam. i. 20. The people are counselled not to make known their calamity by any publick expression of sorrow, as "weeping," &c. lest their enemies should rejoice at it. Dr. Pocock.

—— Aphrah] The word "Aphrah" signifies dust; the Prophet probably uses it here for Ophrah, a town in the tribe of Benjamin, that the name may better suit their condition. W. Lowth. There, that is, farther off from the Philistines, and that they may not take notice of it, silently mourn, or "roll thyself in the dust." The Prophet in this and the following verses reckons up several places, whether belonging to Israel or Judah, by alluding to the names of which he expresses their present or future condition, together with others not named, even the whole land. Dr. Pocock.

11. — thou inhabitant of Saphir,] Saphir signifies fair or elegant. It is taken by some for the proper name of a city; by others for Samaria, or Jerusalem. Whatever be the place intended, these words denounce, that to it and its inhabitants shame and confusion shall take place of their former beauty and glory. The other names also some apply to Samaria and Jerusalem; but the exposition is plainer, by taking them for proper names of places. Dr. Pocock.

—— the inhabitant of Zaanan came not forth &c.] The meaning of this difficult passage seems to be, That when the inhabitants of Beth-ezel, which was first taken by the enemy, were led away "mourning, the inhabitants of Zaanan came not forth" to bewail with them, or comfort or help them, as standing on their own guard against the enemy, or knowing that the same calamity should quickly befall themselves, and so they should have to bewail their own disasters. For "he shall receive of you his standing;" of you, O inhabitants of Zaanan, though you remain longer than those of Beth-ezel, yet "he," that is, the enemy, "shall receive his standing," that is, the reward for his labour and time spent in besieging and taking you: your spoil shall be his recompense. Dr. Pocock.

Zaanan was in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 37: Beth-ezel near Jerusalem, Zech. xiv. 5. Abp. Newcome.

12. For the inhabitant of Maroth waited carefully for good:] The words may be better translated, Although the inhabitant of Maroth waited for good, yet evil &c. W. Lowth.

Maroth seems to be a city in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem, or one that had dependence on it, and so could not but be involved in her calamity. Dr. Pocock. A city of like name is placed in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 59. Abp. Newcome.

13. O thou inhabitant of Lachish, bind the chariot &c.] As for you, O ye inhabitants of Lachish, make all possible speed to escape by flight: put your swiftest beasts into your chariots, and drive away hastily, taking the advantage of your remoteness: try if you can thus avoid the judgment, who were the authors of sin to the rest of Judah, next after the revolt of the ten tribes to their molten calves. Lachish was the first of the tribe of Judah, that both received and diffused the infection to the daughter of Zion; the idolatries of Israel were first found in thee, O Lachish. Bp. Hall.

14. Therefore shalt thou give presents &c.] Therefore shalt thou be fain to give vain presents unto the Philistines to help thee: thou shalt have recourse to those false and lying succours, which have been ever deceitful to the kings of Judah, and so shall be still unto thee. Bp. Hall.

Moresheth-gath appears to have been a place or city, probably near or belonging to Gath of the Philistines. Achzib is the name of a town, mentioned with Mareshah, Josh. xv. 44, as belonging to the tribe of Judah: and there is another of the same name, mentioned Josh. xix. 29, and Judg. i. 31, as belonging to or bordering upon the tribe of Asher. The word Achzib signifies a lie, which signification is alluded to in the menace against it. Dr. Pocock, W. Lowth.

15. Yet will I bring an heir] Namely, an enemy, that shall take possession of the people and all that they have, as if it were his inheritance. Here is an allusion to the name "Mareshah," which includes in it the signification of inheritance. This city is supposed by most interpreters to be the country of the Prophet. Dr. Pocock.

—— he shall come unto Adullam the glory of Israel.] He, that is, the glory and God of Israel, executing His justice upon the people, and thereby manifesting His glory, shall come even as far as to Adullam, in the inmost part of the kingdom of Judah, giving all into the hand of the enemy. See the margin. Bp. Hall, Dr. Pocock. Or, he, namely, the enemy, the heir of Mareshah, shall come to Adullam, which may have been called "the glory of Israel," on account of its situation, strength, or beauty, or for some reasons, now not well known. It was a royal city, Josh. xii. 15; taken by Joshua, and transferred to the tribe of Judah, chap. xv. 35; made a city of defence by Rehoboam, 2 Chron. xi. 7; and it had villages belonging to it, Neh. xi. 30. Dr. Pocock.

16. Make thee bald, &c.] In the mention of Adullam and other particular places, the whole land is understood: and it is accordingly here called upon, to give itself entirely up to sorrow and mourning, and to express its grief by all the customary outward signs. See Jer. vii. 29; Amos viii. 10; Job i. 20. Dr. Pocock.

—— enlarge thy baldness as the eagle;] When he sheds his plumage, Ps. ciii. 5. Bochart observes, that at these times eagles are said to be bald. Abp. Newcome.

Chap. II. ver. 1, 2. The Prophet proceeds to shew, how justly deserved were the punishments, denounced against Israel and Judah, by a declaration of some of the sins of which their inhabitants were guilty. Dr. Pocock.

3. — Behold, against this family do I devise an evil,] As they devise mischief against others, so will I devise an evil against them, as a due punishment for their sin. As they have unjustly deprived others of their inheritance, so a conquering enemy shall dispossess them, and carry them into captivity. See the following verse. The word "family" is equivalent to people, as appears from Jer. i. 15. W. Lowth.

4. — shall one take up a parable &c.] Men shall take up a parable, a doleful song with parabolical and figurative expressions. Dr. Pocock. See the notes on Numb. xxiii. 7; Job xxvii. 1.

—— he hath changed the portion of my people: &c.] He hath removed His people out of their ancient inheritance, that portion which He Himself had allotted them, and hath given it away to other owners. W. Lowth.

5. Therefore thou shalt have none that shall cast a cord by lot in the congregation of the Lord.] Therefore, when this judgment shall be effected, there shall none remain of you, who shall have any lot or inheritance in the land of Israel. Bp. Hall. The words are an address to the whole people, denouncing the irrecoverable loss of their country, and that they should no more return to it, to be therein the congregation of the Lord, and to divide it among themselves by the "cord" or measuring line. Dr. Pocock.

6. Prophesy ye not, say they to them that prophesy:] They do not care to hear the Prophets speak ungrateful truths: see Isai. xxx. 10; Amos vii. 16. W. Lowth.

—— they shall not prophesy to them, that they shall not take shame.] Or, rather, "for they will not take shame." It is to no purpose to prophesy to them, for they still persist in a shameless course of sin. Compare Zeph. iii. 5; Jer. vi. 15. W. Lowth.

7. O thou that art named the house of Jacob,] But dost not in thy doings make good that name, "is the spirit of the Lord straitened?" Is His mercy, His will or power of promising good things by His Prophets, and effecting them, now restrained more than formerly, when He did both, that now thou receivest only threatening messages by His Prophets? "Are these His doings?" Was He wont thus to deal? Or, are these punishments and judgments, which He denounceth, His constant works, or works in which He delighteth? Are they not rather, what you by your sins, as it were, force Him to do? "Do not My words do good to him that walketh uprightly?" Doth He not promise good things, and give them to him that is upright and walketh in good ways? Drs. Pocock and Wells.

8. Even of late my people is risen up as an enemy: &c.] Now of late My people, as if they needed no enemy, are turned enemies to each other: ye strip the garments from the backs of travellers, that pass by securely, without any thought of such cruel and hostile measures. Bp. Hall.

The words rendered "robe," and "garment," appear to signify, the former a looser garment thrown over the rest, the latter a closer one more fitted to the body. Compare Matt. v. 40; Luke vi. 29. Dr. Pocock.

9. The women of my people have ye cast out &c.] By your sins ye cause them to go into captivity. Abp. Newcome.

——from their children have ye taken away my glory for ever.] The glory, which I had bestowed on them by becoming their God, by placing them in a pleasant land, and by protecting and blessing them when they adhered to Me, Ps. xc. 16; Ezek. xvi. 14. Abp. Newcome.

10. Arise ye, and depart; &c.] Away, therefore, arise and get you into captivity; for this land is no place for you: since ye have thus defiled it with your sins, it shall cast you out, and deliver you up to be destroyed by your enemies. Bp. Hall.

11. If a man walking in the spirit and falsehood &c.] Or, "in the spirit of falsehood." W. Lowth. Or, as in the margin, "walk with the wind, and lie falsely." Dr. Pocock. I know well enough how I might please you: if a man would walk in a vain light fashion, and yield to prophesy nothing but lies unto you, and sooth you in gluttony and drunkenness, and tell you of that free scope ye shall have to wine and strong drink; he should be a welcome Prophet to this people. Bp. Hall.

——wine and of strong drink;] See the note on Isai. xxiv. 9.

12. I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee; &c.] There are strange mixtures in Micah, as well as in Hosea and others, of promises with complaints and threatenings. Some interpret ver. 12, as the words of the false prophet spoken of just before: and some think ver. 12, 13, a threatening that God will shut them up to be besieged and led captive. But Jer. xxxi. 10, which is very like ver. 12, is a promise: see also chap. iv. 6. of this prophecy. And so is Isai. lii. 12, which is like the end of ver. 13. Abp. Secker.

The words are a promise of mercy, such as is often subjoined to the threatenings of impending judgment. This promise relates to the general restoration of the Jewish nation, which yet is here and elsewhere confined to that remnant that shall escape the punishments that will come upon the rebellious. See the note upon chap. iv. 7. W. Lowth. It is generally understood by Christians of a spiritual deliverance of the Jews by Christ, and the calling of them into His kingdom, and gathering them into His Church, together with the called of the Gentiles, as "one flock" into one fold, under "one Shepherd." See John x. 16. Dr. Pocock.

13. The breaker is come up before them:] He that shall break the bonds of their captivity, or break through all obstacles that hinder their return home. The Jewish commentators generally understand "the breaker," and "their king" that follows, of the same person, namely, the Messiah: to whom the title of "breaker" may well agree, for his "breaking down" all obstacles, "the middle wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles," Eph. ii. 14; and breaking open the gates of death and hell, and thereby opening the gates of heaven, so that His flock may go in and out, and find pasture, He going before them, and His sheep following Him, John x. 4, 9. W. Lowth, Dr. Pocock.

——they have broken up, &c.] The expressions allude to a flock of sheep, which, as soon as a passage is opened for one to get out, do all of them follow. W. Lowth.

——and their king shall pass before them, and the Lord] Or, "even the Lord on the head of them." The Messiah, who is both their Lord and King, shall lead and conduct them as their Captain and General. Compare Isaiah lii. 12; Hosea i. 11. W. Lowth.

Chap. III. ver. 1.—Hear,—O heads of Jacob,—Is it not for you to know judgment?] Men of their birth and station were more especially bound to know and practise the law of God, which enjoined them to treat the inferiour people as their brethren, to seek their welfare, to give them the fruits of their labours, to render to every man his due, a living price for his goods, and just wages for his work. Reading.

2, 3.—who pluck off their skin &c.] Who offer all cruelty and violence to the people; like some unfaithful shepherd, who, instead of feeding his flock, deals with them according to the literal sense of the words, that he may thereby luxuriously pamper himself. Dr. Pocock.

4. — as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings.] As they have shewed no pity to others, God will shew no pity to them. W. Lowth. God often proportions the punishment to the sin, rendering, as the Jews speak, measure for measure. Dr. Pocock.

5. — that bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace; &c.] Who, so that they may be fed with the largesses of the people, cry, Peace and happiness; but if their mouths are not filled with gifts, are ready to load their niggardly hearers with threats of judgments. Bp. Hall.

6, 7. Therefore night shall be unto you, &c.] Such confusion shall seize upon them, by reason of the calamities signified by the terms "night," "darkness," and the like, that it shall be with them as with men in utter darkness, who know not which way to turn themselves, much less can pretend to direct others: thus shall they be "ashamed" and "confounded," their impostures being made manifest to all. Dr. Pocock.

8. But truly I am full of power &c.] Full of the Spirit of God, and, by virtue of that, "full of power," freely and without partiality to utter the Divine message; and "of judgment," by which to discern between right and wrong; and "of might," to utter His commission without fear of men or their greatness. Dr. Pocock.

10. They build up Zion with blood, &c.] They build them stately houses in Zion and in Jerusalem with those sums which they have extorted by their oppressions of the innocent. Bp. Hall.

——the prophets thereof divine for money:] See ver. 5; Jer. v. 31; vi. 13. This is to be understood of the false prophets. See Zeph. iii. 4; Zech. xiii. 2. W. Lowth.

12. Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed &c.] This prophecy had its utmost completion in the final destruction of the city and temple by the Romans; see Jer. xxvi. 18. The word "heaps" alludes to heaps of stones laid up together in fields newly plowed; see chap. i. 6. "The mountain of the house" is mount Moriah, where the temple, the house of the Lord, stood. W. Lowth.

Chap. IV. According to God's usual method, who in the midst of judgment remembers mercy, to the grievous judgments before denounced, gracious promises of great mercy are here subjoined. In the foregoing words He threatens utter desolation to the mountain of the Lord; here He promises a gracious restoration, establishment, and exaltation: in the former, obstinate sinners are given to understand the severity of God's unavoidable judgments to them; in the latter, penitent believers are given to expect His mercies, which never fail those who are qualified to receive them. Dr. Pocock.

Ver. 1. — in the last days &c.] The times of the Messiah; see the notes on Isai. ii. 2, &c.] W. Lowth.

4. But they shall sit every man under his vine &c.] Micah has repeated Isaiah's prophecy of the establishment of the kingdom of Christ, and of its progress to universality and perfection, in the same words, with little and hardly any material variation. But it is to be observed, that he has here improved the passage, by adding a verse or sentence, for imagery and expression worthy even of the elegance of Isaiah. Bp. Lowth.

5. For all people will walk &c.] While those, that are without the pale of the Church, walk after the false religion of their idol gods, we will walk in the profession of the holy truth of God for

Before CHRIST 710. the name of the LORD our God for ever and ever.

6 In that day, saith the LORD, will I assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted;

[c] Zeph. 3. 19.

7 And I will make her that [c] halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation: and the LORD [d] shall reign over them in mount Zion from henceforth, even for ever.

[d] Dan. 7. 14. Luke 1. 33.

8 ¶ And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem.

9 Now why dost thou cry out aloud? is there no king in thee? is thy counseller perished? for pangs have taken thee as a woman in travail.

10 Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail: for now shalt thou go forth out of the city, and thou shalt dwell in the field, and thou shalt go even to Babylon; there shalt thou be delivered; there the LORD shall redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies. Before CHRIST 710.

11 ¶ Now also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion.

12 But they know not the thoughts of the LORD, neither understand they his counsel: for he shall gather them as the sheaves into the floor.

13 Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass: and thou shalt beat in pieces many people: and I will consecrate their gain unto the LORD, and their substance unto the LORD of the whole earth.

ever. Bp. Hall. A declaration of their adherence to Him alone, on the part of the true Israel of God, the faithful members of His Church, out of whatsoever nation they be called. Dr. Pocock.

"In the name," that is, in the profession of Jehovah, who has such mercies in store for us. Abp. Newcome.

This will be remarkably fulfilled at the general conversion of the Jews, when this prophecy shall receive its utmost completion. W. Lowth.

6. — will I assemble her that halteth,] Though I have broken the power of My people, removed them into captivity afar off, and afflicted them, yet will I restore them to their country, I will send them the Messiah, and will be always their King. Abp. Newcome. This prophecy was fulfilled by Christ's bringing "the lost sheep of the house of Israel" into His fold, by His own preaching and that of His Apostles and Disciples; see Matt. xv. 24; x. 6, &c. Dr. Pocock. Or it will hereafter be fulfilled by the calling of the Jews from their several dispersions into the Church. W. Lowth.

7. — I will make her that halted a remnant,] A part of them shall be preserved, in whom the future designs of My providence shall be accomplished. Abp. Newcome.

—— her that was cast far off a strong nation:] Signifying, either that the Church, in regard to her spiritual strength, should grow to such a height and greatness, that the gates of hell should not be able to prevail against it: (Dr. Pocock:) or that the Jews, when they return from their several dispersions, (see ver. 6,) shall be victorious over all their enemies. Compare chap. v. 8; Ezek. xxxviii, xxxix; and see Obadiah, ver. 18. W. Lowth.

—— and the Lord shall reign over them in mount Zion from henceforth, even for ever.] Zion is to be taken spiritually for the Church, over which Christ reigneth and shall reign for ever. Dr. Pocock. Or, the prophecy may be hereafter literally fulfilled at the restoration of the Jews. Abp. Newcome.

8. — O tower of the flock,] By this is most probably intended the tower of David, or rather all Jerusalem itself, which was, as it were, the tower and fold of God's flock, Israel. The same is called in the words subjoined, "the strong hold of the daughter of Zion." Dr. Pocock.

—— unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion;] By "the first dominion" may be understood, such a kingdom and dominion as the Jews enjoyed at first under David and Solomon; or the chief dominion; or that the dominion should in that first place come to the daughter of Zion or Jerusalem. For the first interpretation of the words, see Luke i. 32, 33; for the second, see Dan. vii. 14; Rom. x. 18; and compare Ps. cx. 1; Matt. xxii. 44; xii. 42; Rev. xvii. 14; xix. 16; i. 5: and for the third, Luke xxiv. 47; Acts xiii. 46. The words, however interpreted, are a prophecy concerning Christ and His dominion. Dr. Pocock.

10. Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, &c.] O My Church of Judea, be grieved and pained for a time; for thou shalt be driven forth of thy cities, and carried away into the captivity of Babylon, but thou shalt not long lie under this affliction: the Lord thy God shall fetch thee hence in His appointed time, and shall redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies; and all this shall be, in a type of the state and deliverance of My Church, from the hands of their spiritual enemies. Bp. Hall.

The Jews' captivity is expressed by their "going out of the city, and dwelling in the field;" because their city and temple being destroyed, they should live in an obscure state, without any visible form of government or worship. The same condition is elsewhere expressed by their living "in the wilderness:" see the note upon Ezek. xx. 15, and Hos. ii. 14. So the Church under persecution is described as "flying into the wilderness," Rev. xii. 14. W. Lowth.

11. — many nations &c.] The Idumeans, Ammonites, Moabites, Philistines, Babylonians. Abp. Newcome. This verse contains an expression of the desires of the heathen nations, that all manner of mischief and shame might befall Zion to her utter desolation. Dr. Pocock. To "look upon our enemies," is to behold their fall with delight. Compare chap. vii. 10; and see the note on Obadiah, ver. 12. W. Lowth.

12. But they know not the thoughts of the Lord,] They are ignorant of God's purpose, which is to punish them with an entire destruction, after He hath executed His judgments upon His own people. See Jer. xxv. 27—29. Great calamities are compared to the threshing of corn in a floor: see the following verse; and the note upon Isai. xxi. 10. W. Lowth.

13. Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion: &c.] The expressions allude to the manner of treading out the corn in the Eastern countries by the feet of oxen: see Deut. xxv. 4. The word "horn" means the horny substance on the feet of the cattle, and is equivalent to the "hoofs," which follow. W. Lowth.

It is observed by some concerning this prophecy, that it will be in fulfilling to the second coming of Christ: "For He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet," 1 Cor. xv. 25. In that day certainly it will appear, how the things here spoken, as every other word of God, have without the failing of one tittle been fully made good, though perhaps, till then, men will not well agree concerning the manner, or time of their fulfilment. Dr. Pocock.

Chap. V. ver. 1. Now gather thyself in troops, O daughter of troops: &c.] This verse is to be understood of some foreign invasion of Judea by a nation that had numerous troops, and may relate to the conquest of Judea by the Babylonians. "The daughter of troops" is a phrase of the same kind as the daughter of affliction; that is, one surrounded by affliction: so "the son of death" is one condemned to die, 1 Sam. xx. 31; Ps. cii. 20. "Smiting on the cheek" signifies treating one in a despiteful manner, Lam. iii. 30; Matt. v. 39. "The judge of Israel" is equivalent to the king of Israel: see Amos ii. 3. W. Lowth. Hoshea may be supposed to have suffered such contumely when Samaria was taken, 2 Kings xvii. 6; or Zedekiah, on the taking of Jerusalem, 2 Kings xxv. 7. Abp. Newcome.

2. But thou, Beth-lehem Ephratah, &c.] The Prophet, having intimated what contempt should befall the family of David, subjoins, according to God's usual method, a declaration of the dignity which they should attain to, in the time of their restoration from the Babylonish captivity. Dr. Pocock.

Ephrath, or Ephratah, was another name for Beth-lehem in the tribe of Judah. See Gen. xxxv. 19. And both names are joined together to distinguish it from another Beth-lehem, situate in the tribe of Zebulun, mentioned Joshua xix. 15. It is called "little among the thousands;" that is, among the families or cities of Judah. Compare Judg. vi. 15; 1 Sam. x. 19. The expression is taken from the first division of the people into thousands, hundreds, and other subordinate divisions. See Exod. xviii. 21—25. Both the city and family of David were in a mean condition at the time of Christ's birth; whereupon the Blessed Virgin in her song thankfully commemorates God's extraordinary favour in honouring that low estate to which they were reduced, with the birth of the Messiah, Luke i. 48, 52, 53. W. Lowth.

——though thou be little among the thousands of Judah,] Every tribe was of old divided into so many thousands, as shires in England are into hundreds, over which presided a leader to command them in battle. Beth-lehem was too small in people to be reckoned as one of these thousands, or to be numbered singly in the army against the enemy; but is promised the advantage over them all in giving birth to the "Ruler in Israel," who is superiour to all the princes of the thousands; even that Son of David, "whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." Bp. Chandler.

——out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel;] The Scribes and Pharisees understood this prophecy of the birth of the Messiah, as appears from Matt. ii. 5, 6; and so did the generality of the Jews of that age, who speak of it as an undoubted truth, that "Christ was to come of the seed of David, and out of the town of Beth-lehem where David was," John vii. 42. The Chaldee agrees with their sentiments, and expressly applies the prophecy to the Messiah; and our Lord was born at Beth-lehem by an especial act of Providence, that this prophecy might plainly be fulfilled in Him. See Luke ii. 4. "To come forth" is the same as to be born. See Gen. x. 14; xvii. 6; xxv. 25; 1 Chron. ii. 53; Isai. xi. 1. W. Lowth.

——whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting.] The Prophet proceeds in describing Him, who was to "come out of Beth-lehem," and to be "Ruler in Israel," by another more eminent coming or going forth, even from all eternity. This is so signal a description of the Divine generation before all time, or of that going forth from everlasting of Christ, the eternal Son of God, God, of the substance of the Father, begotten before the worlds, who was afterwards in time (according to the prediction that He should "come forth out of Beth-lehem") made man, of the substance of His mother, and born in the world, that the prophecy evidently belongs only to Him, and could never be verified of any other. Dr. Pocock.

The plural form may denote the eminence of Christ's eternal generation. Abp. Secker. It is a common Hebraism, to denote the eminency or continuation of a thing or action by the plural number, "God shall judge the world with righteousnesses and equity," Ps. xcviii. 9; or most righteously and equitably. "The angers of the Lord," Lam. iv. 16; "wisdoms," Prov. i. 20; for the high degree of both. Bp. Chandler.

This famous prophecy of Micah appears to have given occasion to the manner of speaking, used by our Church in her second Article, where she speaks of the Son of God, as "begotten from everlasting." Waldo.

3. Therefore will he give them up, &c.] But in the mean time He shall suffer His Israel to be grievously afflicted, &c. Bp. Hall. The particle, rendered "therefore," should be translated "nevertheless," here and in some other places, as Dr. Pocock observes. Notwithstanding the promise of so great a blessing, God will give up His people into the hands of their enemies, or leave them to be exercised with troubles and afflictions, till the appointed time of their deliverance cometh, which shall be greater than that from Babylon. See chap. iv. 10. This deliverance may be understood of the Church bringing forth children by the preaching of the Gospel; see Gal. iv. 27; but will be more fully completed in the general restoration of the Jewish nation, to be expected in the latter ages. Compare Isai. lxvi. 7, 8. W. Lowth.

——then the remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel.] Or, "shall be converted with the children of Israel." W. Lowth. The promise of God was not only to Israel according to the flesh, but "to all (also) that were afar off, even as many as the Lord our God should call," Acts ii. 39; and all these are called "the remnant of his brethren," even those that were before "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel," and afar off, are now in Christ made one with them, Eph. ii. 12, &c.; all brethren among themselves, and all brethren to Christ their ruler. Having taken on Him their nature in the flesh, He is not ashamed to call them so, as the Apostle speaks, Heb. ii. 11, confirming it out of Ps. xxii. 22: and Christ Himself vouchsafes to call all true believers by this title, Matt. xii. 46; Luke viii. 21. Dr. Pocock.

4. And he shall stand and feed &c.] He shall persist and continue to feed; that is, He shall carefully, watchfully, and tenderly supply all the wants of His subjects, as a good shepherd doth those of his sheep: compare John x. 9, 14. And this He shall do "in the strength of the Lord," not as an ordinary man, but as One, who hath extraordinary and plainly Divine power conferred on Him from the Lord; compare Matt. xxviii. 18; and "in the majesty of the name of the Lord His God," so as plainly to evince, that the majestick name of the Lord His God is in Him, (see Exod. xxiii. 21,) that God hath glorified Him, and is glorified in and by Him, John xiii. 31, 32: and under the protection of His great power and majesty, "they" His subjects "shall abide," shall be in a sure and steadfast condition, secure against all other powers; compare John x. 11, 12, 28—30: "for now," when He shall enter on His rule, "shall He be great unto the ends of the earth," extending His name, glory, and dominion as wide as the world, and to the utmost parts thereof: compare Matt. xxviii. 19, 20; Acts i. 8; Rom. x. 18. Dr. Pocock. The last clause is alluded to by the angel, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest," &c. Luke i. 32. He is dignified with such titles, as were never given to any creature, as the Apostle at large proves, Heb. i. 4, &c. Compare Isai. lii. 13, and see the note there. W. Lowth.

5. And this man shall be the peace,] A Jewish expositor observes, that this passage is to be understood of the Messiah, because He shall be the cause of peace, as it is said, "and He shall speak peace unto the heathen," Zech. ix. 10. And therefore our Lord Christ being the true Messiah, of Him, agreeably to the words here, it is said, "He is our peace," Eph. ii. 14. At His birth the heavenly host proclaimed "peace on earth," Luke ii. 14; and He, while on earth, came and preached "peace to them which were afar off, and to them that were nigh," Eph. ii. 17: and when He was again to leave the world, He bequeathed peace to His disciples, "gave it to them, and left it with them," John xiv. 27. Of Him therefore it might be truly said by way of prophecy, "This man shall be peace," or "the peace." Dr. Pocock.

This sentence may be best explained as connected with the foregoing verse. W. Lowth.

This prophecy of Micah is perhaps the most important single prophecy in the Old Testament, and the most comprehensive, respecting the personal character of the Messiah, and His successive manifestations to the world. It crowns the whole chain of prophecies descriptive of the several limitations of the blessed "Seed of the woman" to the line of Shem, to the family of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to the tribe of Judah, and to the royal house of David, here terminating in His birth at Beth-lehem, "the city of David." It carefully distinguishes His human nativity from His eternal generation; foretells the rejection of the Israelites and Jews for a season; their final restoration, and the universal "peace" destined to prevail throughout the earth in "the regeneration." It forms therefore the basis of the New Testament, which begins with His human birth at Beth-lehem, the miraculous circumstances of which are recorded in the introductions of St. Matthew's and St. Luke's Gospels; His eternal generation, as "the Word," in the sublime introduction of St. John's Gospel; His prophetick character, and second coming, illustrated in the four Gospels and Epistles, ending with a prediction of the speedy approach of the latter in the Apocalypse, Rev. xxii. 20. Dr. Hales.

—— when the Assyrian shall come into our land: &c.] The sense, which Mr. Mede has given to this passage, appears most agreeable to the scope and design of the following part of the chapter. He expounds the place of the general destruction of some remarkable enemy, or enemies to God and His truth, which should come to pass before the consummation of all things: an event foretold in several places of Scripture. See Ps. cx. 5, 6; Isai. xxvi. 20, 21; xxxiv. 1, &c.; lxvi. 16; Jer. xxx. 7, 10; Ezek. xxxviii, xxxix; Joel iii. 9, 14; Obad. ver. 15, &c.; Zeph. iii. 8; Hag. ii. 22; Zech. xii. 1; xiv. 8; Rev. xix. 19; xx. 9. This enemy is probably called by the name of the Assyrian in Isaiah, chap. xiv. 25, as well as by Micah here. See the note upon that place. Mr. Mede ingeniously conjectures, that this name was given him by these two Prophets, because that ever since the invasion of Sennacherib, the very name of Assyrian carried terrour along with it, being esteemed by the Jews as their most formidable enemy. W. Lowth.

—— seven shepherds, and eight principal men.] Or, rulers. Under His conduct we shall be furnished with commanders sufficient to oppose the enterprises of the enemy. "Shepherds" are elsewhere equivalent to princes or generals: see Jer. vi. 3; xxv. 34; Nahum iii. 18. The words "seven" and "eight" are used for an indefinite number: see Eccles. xi. 2. So once and twice, six and seven, are used, Job xxxiii. 14; v. 19; Prov. vi. 16. W. Lowth.

6. And they shall waste — in the entrances thereof:] In its borders, where its garrisons are, and its chief strength lies. Assyria is called "the land of Nimrod," because he was the first king of the country: see Gen. x. 11, where the marginal reading is right. W. Lowth.

According to the figurative signification of the words, embraced by most Christians, the meaning of this passage is evident, that by the might and power of Christ, and such as shall be by Him qualified and commissioned for the spreading and maintaining of His truth, all that oppose it shall be brought under and made to yield, as certainly as when an enemy, such as the Assyrian then was to Israel, is by many commanders and their forces beaten in his own country, and with his own weapons, forced from him and turned back upon himself, (see the margin,) so that he shall not be able to create farther disturbances. Dr. Pocock.

—— thus shall he deliver us from the Assyrian, &c.] By these means shall Christ deliver us from the hands of such enemies as shall assault us, so that we shall not have need to fear them. Dr. Pocock.

7. And the remnant of Jacob shall be &c.] The remnant of the dispersed Jews upon their conversion shall be the instruments of converting those Gentiles among whom they live: and may therefore be fitly represented by the dews and rains which come from heaven, and make the earth fruitful. W. Lowth.

—— that tarrieth not for man, &c.] The dews and rains are the gift of God, and are here distinguished from those fountains and canals of water, which men convey into their fields and gardens by their own industry. W. Lowth.

8. And the remnant of Jacob shall be — as a lion &c.] This has been most eminently and fully made good by the establishing of Christ's spiritual kingdom among men, and by the conquests obtained by His little flock over sin, the world, and the devil. Dr. Pocock.

10, 11. — I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, &c.] These words are a promise of peace and security, and an encouragement to rely on God alone, without dependence on ordinary human helps. Much the like words are applied to the peaceable land, and throw down all thy strong holds:

12 And I will cut off witchcrafts out of thine hand; and thou shalt have no more soothsayers:

13 Thy graven images also will I cut off, and thy ‖ standing images out of the midst of thee; and thou shalt no more worship the work of thine hands.

condition of the kingdom of Christ by Zechariah, chap. ix. 10. Dr. Pocock. See also Hos. i. 7.

12—14. And I will cut off witchcrafts &c.] The Prophet may be supposed to mention here those sins wherein the Jews of his own age were chiefly faulty, thereby to signify, that in aftertimes, when the promises here mentioned should be fulfilled, such offences should not be found among them. Compare Isai. ii. 6—8, with the context here. We may in general take notice, that the destruction of idolatry is often mentioned in the Prophets as a principal circumstance in their descriptions of the flourishing state of the Church, which should come to pass in aftertimes. W. Lowth.

14. — so will I destroy thy cities.] It is supposed by some interpreters, that in ver. 11 are meant cities of defence, and here cities of idolatrous worship, in which were their groves and idol-temples. Dr. Pocock.

15. And I will execute vengeance &c.] When I have purged My people from their corruptions, I will severely vindicate their cause to the utter destruction of all their unbelieving enemies. W. Lowth.

Chap. VI. ver. 1. — Arise, contend thou before the mountains, &c.] Arise, saith God to me, and call the very senseless earth, even the hills and mountains, to record what I have to say against My people. Bp. Hall. See the notes on Deut. iv. 26; Isai. i. 2.

The manner of raising attention in the two first verses by calling on man to urge his plea in the face of all nature, and on the inanimate creation to hear the expostulation of Jehovah with His people, is truly awakening and magnificent. The words of Jehovah follow in the 3d, 4th, and 5th verses. And God's mercies having been set before His people, one of them is introduced in a beautiful dramatick form, as asking what his duty is toward so gracious a God, ver. 6, 7. The answer follows in the 8th verse, in the words of the Prophet. Abp. Newcome.

5. O my people, remember now what Balak king of Moab consulted, &c.] Remember what answers I put into the mouth of Balaam, the son of Beor: how I drew blessings even from his mouth upon you, instead of curses, which Balak would have hired him to utter against you: remember all My gracious dealings with you in all the passages of the wilderness, even from Shittim unto Gilgal, till the very entrance into the land of promise; that ye may acknowledge the righteous proceedings of the Lord with you. Bp. Hall.

To make the sense of the words "from Shittim unto Gilgal" complete, we must supply it from the beginning of the verse, as in the Chaldee Paraphrase, "Remember what I have done for you from Shittim unto Gilgal;" that is, from your encampment in the plains of Moab, near Shittim, east of Jordan, (where they sinned in the matter of Peor, Numb. xxv. 3, 18, and deserved to be cut off, had not God been merciful to them,) until your encampment at Gilgal on the other side of Jordan in the land of Canaan. At Shittim they abode till after Moses's death, Josh. iii. 1: thence Joshua conducted them over Jordan. As therefore in the former words they are reminded of the great things which God did for them under the conduct of Moses; so in these they are reminded of His benefits to them under the conduct of Joshua; and so, in short, of all that He did from His first beginning to redeem them from bondage, and bringing them out of Egypt through the Red sea, through the desert, and through Jordan, till He had settled them in the promised land. All these things might convince them of "the Lord's righteousness;" of His great goodness towards them, and of His faithfulness in fulfilling the promises made to their fathers. W. Lowth, Dr. Pocock.

6. Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, &c.] This abrupt passionate form of speech seems to require something to be understood, for the purpose of connecting it with the preceding words. It is spoken by the Prophet, as in the person of the people, replying to the appeal of God: and it is either an acknowledgment of their guilt, and an expression of their desire to repent, if they knew what would be accepted by God; or it is a justification of themselves, intimating that if they had been defective in their duty, and thereby displeasing to God, it was done, not willingly, but through ignorance. Dr. Pocock.

Or, the words are part of a private conference between Balaam and Balak, which Moses has omitted, as foreign to the subject of his history; but which the Israelites ought to have holden in remembrance, and in which the idolatrous king inquires of God's Prophet, in what way he, the king, might make expiation for his offences. Bp. Horsley.

——shall I come before him with burnt offerings, &c.] The constant sacrifice, that was offered to God by way of acknowledgment of His dominion over His creatures; "with calves of a year old," which was the sin offering, that the high priest offered for himself. Or will He rather accept of those great and costly sacrifices, which were offered upon publick and solemn occasions, such as that which Solomon offered at the dedication of the temple? "Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil?" Or if none of these will do, shall

I try to atone Him after the manner of the heathen, by the dearest thing in the world, the firstborn of my children? "Shall I give my firstborn," &c.? If God was to be appeased at all, surely they thought it must be by some of these ways; for beyond these they could imagine nothing of greater value and efficacy. Abp. Tillotson.

7. — shall I give my firstborn] The strength and stay of the family. W. Lowth.

8. He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; &c.] Both the dictates of reason, and the laws of God, sufficiently inform men what are the substantial parts of their duty; namely, the practice of justice and mercy, and a reverent behaviour towards God. W. Lowth. The Prophet here tells them, that they were quite out of the way in thinking to pacify God upon the terms proposed; that there are other things, much better and more pleasing to Him than these sacrifices. For some of them were expressly forbidden by God, as the offering up of children: and for the rest, they were not good in themselves, but merely by virtue of their institution, and because they were commanded. But the things, which He would recommend to them, are such as are good in their own nature, and required of us by God on that account. "He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good." Abp. Tillotson. We have reason all to apply to ourselves these words of the Prophet. For though it still be true, that some ages of the world have been dark, and others blinded with false lights; that some men naturally see little, and others are strangely given to see wrong; yet, in general, the duties of life are level to the capacities of all men: and especially among Christians, but, above all, Christians so peculiarly blessed with the means of instruction as we of this nation are, no one can possibly, without either deliberate obstinacy or intolerable negligence, continue unacquainted with what he is bound to do, or the recompense he is to expect, if he do it not. Abp. Secker.

—— and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do &c.] The whole of man's duty is here summed up in three parts. 1st, To "do justly," is to give to every one, whether superiours, equals, or inferiours, their due; to do in all things what is equal and right, not oppressing any, nor defrauding them in any kind of dealing, not to hurt them by word or deed, nor injure them in their persons, estates, or good name, or any thing belonging to them. 2dly, To "love mercy," is not only to give to every one what he might in justice require, but to be kind, merciful, compassionate, exercising all acts of charity and beneficence willingly, cheerfully, and without expecting recompense. 3dly, To "walk humbly with thy God," is to frame the life and conversation with a view to God's commandments, in a dutiful performance of His will, in a patient resignation to His dispensations, and in a ready assent to His revealed truths. The two first parts comprise the duties of the second table; the third, those of the first: together they are a summary of all the Ten Commandments; and the performance of them is "more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices," Mark xii. 33. Dr. Pocock.

9. The Lord's voice crieth unto the city, &c.] The voice of the Lord calleth by me His Prophet to the city of Jerusalem; and those, that are wise-hearted, will have a due and awful respect to Thy name, O Lord: hear, O Jerusalem, hear thou the sad news of that sharp rod of affliction, which is prepared for thee; and consider who it is that hath appointed it for thy correction. Bp. Hall.

10. Are there yet the treasures of wickedness &c.] From hence to the end is a detail of the then reigning sins among the Jews; more particularly the ten tribes, who had separated themselves by an avowed schism from the unity of the Church. He taxes them with covetousness, base dishonesty, falsehood and deceit, injustice and oppression in their commerce and dealings with men, and as notorious a falsehood towards God by profaneness and irreligion; keeping rather the impious and idolatrous statutes of Omri and Ahab, than the Divine law delivered by Moses. Wogan.

14. — and thy casting down &c.] Thy casting down shall be in the midst of thine own streets: thou shalt fall, even within thine own walls; and thou shalt take hold of thy children to deliver them from the enemy, but thou shalt not rescue them; and those, whom thou hast obtained to deliver from the present slaughter, will I soon after give up to the sword. Bp. Hall.

16. — Omri, — Ahab,] It is said of Omri, that he "did worse than all that were before him," 1 Kings xvi. 25: and his son Ahab added the worship of Baal to the idolatry of the golden calves, ver. 31; which is spoken of there as the worse degree of idolatry, because it was the introducing of an heathen idol, whereas the golden calves were only an idolatrous representation of the true God. Manasseh followed Ahab in his wickedness: see 2 Kings xxi. 3. W. Lowth.

—— therefore ye shall bear the reproach of my people.] The Prophet still directs his discourse to the great and rich men, ver. 12, 15; and tells them, that since they have given the chief occasion to those reproaches which unbelievers have thrown out upon God's people, as if they were rejected and cast out by Him, therefore they shall bear the principal share of that shame and contempt wherewith their enemies shall treat them. Compare Ps. xlii. 10; Isai. xxv. 8. W. Lowth.

Chap. VII. ver. 1, 2. —I am as when they have gathered the summer fruits, &c.] As the early fig of excellent flavour cannot be found in the advanced season of summer, or the choice cluster of grapes after vintage; so neither can the good and upright man be discovered by diligent searching in Israel. This comparison is beautifully implied. Abp. Newcome.

4. —sharper than a thorn hedge:] Some of the fences in the Holy Land perfectly answer those passages of the Jewish Prophets, that speak of hedges made of thorny plants, and the sharpness of the thorns on those then in use. See Hos. ii. 6; Prov. xv. 19. Harmer.

—— the day of thy watchmen and thy visitation cometh;] The time of vengeance, foretold by thy Prophets: or the time of vengeance, denounced upon thy princes and magistrates. Dr. Pocock, W. Lowth.

7. Therefore I will look unto the Lord; &c.] The times being so corrupt, and such danger to be apprehended from all sorts of men, so that no reliance could be placed on those who ought to be a man's greatest supports, ver. 5, 6; the Prophet speaking as of himself, in the person probably of the nation in captivity, sets the example of declaring his confidence in God.

Having hitherto denounced judgments, now, according to the custom of the Prophets, he draws towards his conclusion with consolatory words and promises. Dr. Pocock.

10. —mine eyes shall behold her: &c.] As the heathen beheld the desolation of God's Church and temple with delight, chap. iv. 11, so shall it come to my turn to see God's judgments executed upon the Babylonish empire, and that brought down to as low a condition as ever they had reduced God's people. W. Lowth.

The prophecy was fulfilled, when Babylon was taken, and the empire destroyed by the Medes and Persians, Dan. v. 30, 31: and it is observable, that that great turn of fortune was made in the very night, when Belshazzar and his nobles insulted afresh, and lifted up themselves against God and His people. Dr. Pocock.

11. In the day that thy walls are to be built, &c.] When God shall visit His people, and repair their decayed estate, (compare Amos ix. 11,) then the tyrannical edicts of their persecutors shall be utterly abolished. This may partly relate to the recalling of those edicts which put a stop to the rebuilding of the city and temple of Jerusalem. See Ezra iv. 23, 24; vi. 14; Neh. ii. 8, 17. W. Lowth. Or, it may mean the decree of God denounced by His Prophets concerning the punishment of the Jews. Dr. Pocock.

12. In that day also he shall come &c.] Concerning the phrase "in that day," see the note on Isai. iv. 2. By the single person "he" is meant the people, or the dispersion of Israel. The words imply, that the Jews should return from their several dispersions, where they were scattered: though not till after the land, for the evil of their doings, should have been desolate, according to the marginal reading of the next verse. W. Lowth, Dr. Pocock.

This prophecy was made good by the restoration of the Jews, and their coming again from all parts to Jerusalem, after the land had been for seventy years desolate for their sins: it may have been fulfilled in a higher sense by the setting up of the Church, the kingdom of Christ; and by so many nations being called into it by the preaching of the Gospel. Dr. Pocock. Perhaps also it looks forward to a future restoration of the Jews. W. Lowth.

The verse is thus perspicuously paraphrased by Bishop Hall: "In the mean time, namely, of the desolation of the land, O God, take Thou care of Thy people: O do Thou feed and govern them by Thy gracious protection; lead Thou this flock of Thine heritage, which now dwell solitarily in the wilderness of their captivity, into the midst of Thy fruitful pastures of Carmel; let them feed in the rich fields of Bashan and Gilead, as in former times." The words imply a gracious promise of return made to the nation, or at least the church of the Jews, out of captivity to their own land; and that, under the protection of God, they should abundantly enjoy all things conducing to their well-being, set forth under the similitude of sheep feeding in rich pastures. However, all these good things promised to the Jews are in a higher manner made good to the Church of Christ, and all faithful believers, rescued from sin and Satan, and brought back into the fold; who, as He saith, shall be saved under His protection, and go in and out, and find pasture. Dr. Pocock.

15. According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt &c.] Thy prayer is heard, saith the Lord; I will do thus for thee, O My people; and, as I did in the days of thy coming out of Egypt do marvellous things for thee, so will I do again. Bp. Hall. The words are generally considered as spoken in the person of God in answer to the petition of the Prophet, "Feed Thy people" &c. See Jer. xvi. 14, 15; xxiii. 7, 8. The words, both here and in Jeremiah, direct us to a wonderful deliverance to be wrought by Christ, for a fuller and higher completion of these prophecies than was effected by the deliverance of the Jews either from the Egyptian bondage, or Babylonish captivity, though the words point more immediately at those. Dr. Pocock.

16, 17. The nations shall see and be confounded &c.] These two verses express the great astonishment and confusion which should be experienced by the enemies of God's people, at seeing the tokens of Divine favour appearing so conspicuously in their behalf. W. Lowth.

17. —and shall fear because of thee.] Here is a change of persons: for the Prophet, filled with admiration, suddenly addresses his speech to the Lord, of whom he was before speaking. Dr. Pocock.

18. —the remnant of his heritage?] Those Jews, who are reserved to be partakers of the benefits, which shall be made good to that nation on their conversion and restoration. Compare chap. iv. 7; v. 7, 8. By receiving them into His former favour on their repentance, He will fulfil His gracious declaration to Moses, Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. W. Lowth. Though God chastise the people of His inheritance, and cut off the wicked from among them, yet a holy seed, a remnant, shall be preserved and saved, Rom. ix. 27; and to these is the promise here made, not to all in general. Dr. Pocock.

19. —thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea.] Thou wilt utterly abolish them, that they shall not have dominion over us, as Thou didst destroy Pharaoh and his army in the Red sea. This victory will be obtained by the merits of Christ, and the grace of the Gospel: see Col. ii. 14; Rom. vi. 14. W. Lowth.

20. Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, &c.] These words contain a promise of Christ, that Seed of Abraham, in whom all the kindreds of the earth were to be blessed, with all the benefits of His redemption; and were by Him fulfilled by rescuing all that come to Him for redemption, both Jews and Gentiles of all nations, out of the hands of worse enemies than the Babylonians, by making them citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, and conferring on them all spiritual blessings. Compare Luke i. 54, 55, and 68—75. God's "truth to Jacob," and His "mercy to Abraham," is thus fully performed in Christ; and will be in performing unto the world's end, by His calling into His Church both Jews and Gentiles, and offering them His salvation, and blessing them with all spiritual blessings.

It is the observation of an ancient Jewish author, that there is not any denunciation of hard things to Israel, which is not concluded with promises of mercy. Among other instances from Moses, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Jeremiah, he brings this conclusion of Micah's prophecy. And very remarkable indeed is this conclusion, which, to shew how greatly God delights in mercy, is uttered in words giving assurance of mercy, not only to Israel after the flesh on their repentance, but to all who shall, by faith in Christ the promised Seed, lay hold on His promise made to Abraham, and in Him to all the kindreds of the earth. So that the Gentiles also reading it cannot but glorify God, and rejoice with His people, and sing unto Him that hymn, which the Apostle shews to be suited to them, "O praise the Lord, all ye nations: praise Him, all ye people. For His merciful kindness is great toward us: and the truth of the Lord endureth for ever. Praise ye the Lord;" Rom. xv. 9, 10, 11; Ps. cxvii. Dr. Pocock.

CHAP. VI.....20th Sunday after Trinity,.....Evening.

N A H U M.

INTRODUCTION.

NAHUM describes himself as an Elkoshite; which some have considered as a patronymick expression, conceiving it to imply his being a descendant of Elkosha; but which is generally supposed to intimate that he was born at Elkosh, or Elkosha, a small village in Galilee, of which St. Jerome professes to have seen the ruins. Dr. Gray.

It may be concluded from chap. ii. 2, that Nahum prophesied after the captivity of the ten tribes. Josephus places him in the reign of Jotham, and says, that his predictions came to pass one hundred and fifteen years afterwards. According to our best chronologers, this date would bring us to the year in which Samaria was taken. And I agree with those who think that Nahum uttered this prophecy in the reign of Hezekiah, and not long after the subversion of the kingdom of Israel by Shalmaneser. Abp. Newcome.

The illustrious prophecy foretelling the future downfall of the Assyrian empire, remarkably accomplished in little more than a century after it was delivered, affords a signal evidence of the inspiration of Nahum; and a striking lesson of humility to human pride. It must have furnished much consolation to the tribes who were carried away captive by the king of Assyria, as well as to those of Benjamin and Judah; and all must have rejoiced with the hope of deliverance, to hear that their conquerors should in time be conquered, their city levelled to the dust, and their empire overturned. The Book in which these interesting prophecies are contained, is justly considered by Bishop Lowth as a complete and perfect poem, of which the conduct and imagery are truly admirable.

The fire, spirit, and sublimity of Nahum, are unequalled. His scenes are painted with great variety and splendour. The opening of his work, in which he describes the attributes of God, is august; and the preparations for the attack, as well as the destruction of Nineveh, are represented with singular effect. The art, with which the immediate destruction of the Assyrians under Sennacherib is intermingled with the future ruin of the empire, affords a very elegant specimen of the manner in which the Prophets delight to introduce present and distant events under one point of view. The allegorical pictures in this book are remarkably beautiful, chap. ii. 7, 11, 12.

Neither history nor tradition furnishes us with any account of Nahum, or of the period of his death. His tomb, or pretended tomb, was formerly shewn in a village named Bethogabra, now called Giblin, near Emmaus. Dr. Gray.

The majesty of God in goodness to his people, and severity against his enemies.

THE burden of Nineveh. The book of the vision of Nahum the Elkoshite.

2 ‖ God is [a]jealous, and the LORD revengeth; the LORD revengeth, and † is furious; the LORD will take vengeance on his adversaries, and he reserveth wrath for his enemies.

Chap. I. The conduct and imagery of this prophetical poem are truly admirable. The commencement grandly sets forth the justice and power of God, tempered by lenity and goodness, ver. 2—8. A sudden address to the Assyrians follows; and a prediction of their perplexity and overthrow, as devisers of evil against the true God, ver. 9—11. Jehovah Himself then proclaims freedom to His people from the Assyrian yoke, and the destruction of the Assyrian idols, ver. 12—14. Upon which the Prophet in a most lively manner turns the attention of Judah to the approach of the messenger, who brings such glad tidings; and bids her celebrate her festivals, and offer her thank offerings without fear of so powerful an adversary. Abp. Newcome.

Ver. 1. The burden of Nineveh.] The heavy tidings that God sent to Nineveh, and to the whole kingdom of Assyria. Bp. Hall. The repentance of the Ninevites upon the preaching of Jonah appears to have been of no long continuance. For not many years after we find the Prophet Nahum foretelling the total and entire destruction of the city. His whole prophecy relates to this single event; and the city was accordingly destroyed by the Medes and Babylonians. In whose reign it was taken, and who were the persons that commanded in this expedition, are points concerning which authors are not agreed. Bp. Newton. God pardons men, and bears with them, upon their humiliation; but when they return to their iniquities, He at last executes the decrees of His justice. Ostervald.

4 The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways: † they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings.

† Heb. their show.

8. But with an overrunning flood he will make an utter end of the place thereof,] An army's overrunning a country is often compared to an inundation: see Isai. viii. 7, 8; Dan. ix. 26; xi. 10, 22, 40. Thus God will bring the great city of Nineveh to utter ruin, so that there shall be no remains of it in aftertimes. W. Lowth. See the notes on chap. ii. 6; and chap. iii. 17—19.

9. — affliction shall not rise up the second time.] I will make an utter destruction all at once: "When I begin, I will also make an end," as it is expressed 1 Sam. iii. 12. W. Lowth.

10. For while they be folden together as thorns, &c.] While they combine themselves, and plot together in wickedness, as thorns are folded up together in a hedge; and while they are consorting together in their drunkenness and excess; then, even then, shall the judgment of God fall upon them, and devour them as the fire consumes the dry stubble. Bp. Hall. Diodorus Siculus, who ascribes the taking of Nineveh, and the subversion of the Assyrian empire, to Arbaces the Mede, assisted by Belesis the Babylonian, relates, that while all the Assyrian army were feasting for their former victories, those about Arbaces, being informed by some deserters of the negligence and drunkenness in the camp of the enemies, assaulted them unexpectedly by night, and falling orderly on them disorderly, and prepared on them unprepared, became masters of the camp, and slew many of the soldiers, and drove the rest into the city. Bp. Newton.

11. There is one come out of thee,] That is, thou hast produced such an one. Such were Pul, 2 Kings xv. 19; Tiglath-pileser, chap. xv. 29; Shalmaneser, chap. xvii. 6; and Sennacherib, chap. xviii. 17; xix. 23. Abp. Newcome.

12. — Though they be quiet,] Though the Assyrians be secure. Bp. Hall.

13. For now will I break his yoke from off thee,] The Jews paid tribute to the Assyrians, 2 Kings xviii. 14, and the Israelites were under actual captivity among them at this time. Abp. Newcome.

Chap. II. In the next place, Nineveh is called on to prepare for the approach of her enemies, as instruments in the hand of Jehovah; and the military array and muster of the Medes and Babylonians, their rapid approach to the city, the process of the siege, the capture of the place, the captivity, lamentation, and flight of the inhabitants, the sacking of the wealthy city, and the consequent desolation and terrour, are described in the true spirit of Eastern poetry, and with many pathetick, vivid, and sublime images, ver. 1—10. A grand and animated allegory succeeds this description, ver. 11, 12: which is explained, and applied to the city of Nineveh, in ver. 13. Abp. Newcome.

Ver. 1. He that dasheth in pieces] An enemy, that will break down thy walls, and destroy thine inhabitants, O Nineveh. W. Lowth. The army of the Babylonians and Medes. Abp. Newcome.

—— keep the munition, &c.] Strengthen thy garrisons, guard thy passes, stir up all thy strength and courage. W. Lowth.

2. For the Lord hath turned away the excellency of Jacob, &c.] But, notwithstanding all thy preparation and warlike forces, he shall prevail against thee, O Nineveh; for if the Lord have turned away the excellency of Jacob and Israel, and hath given it over to the spoil of the Assyrians, who have destroyed their vineyards, how much more will He deface the glory of Nineveh! Bp. Hall. Some translate the words thus: The Lord hath returned, or will revenge the pride or injurious dealings against Jacob, and the pride against Israel; that is, He will requite the injuries and oppressions, which Sennacherib and Shalmaneser, the kings of Assyria, have exercised upon Judah and Israel. W. Lowth.

3. The shield of his mighty men &c.] Thine enemy of Babylon shall come fiercely upon thee, and with great pomp of terrour: the shield of his mighty warriours shall glitter with brightness; his valiant men shall be decked with scarlet. Bp. Hall. This may be understood either of the colour of their shields and clothes, when they were made, or of their being died in blood afterwards: compare Isai. lxiii. 2. W. Lowth.

—— the fir trees shall be terribly shaken.] The earth and woods adjoining shall shake with the noise. Bp. Hall. Or by "fir trees" are meant the spears and lances made of fir, so long and large that they looked like so many trees. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 713.

5 He shall recount his ‖ worthies: they shall stumble in their walk; they shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the † defence shall be prepared.

6 The gates of the rivers shall be opened, and the palace shall be ‖ dissolved.

7 And ‖ Huzzab shall be ‖ led away captive, she shall be brought up, and her maids shall lead her as with the voice of doves, tabering upon their breasts.

8 But Nineveh is ‖ of old like a pool of water: yet they shall flee away. Stand, stand, shall they cry; but none shall ‖ look back.

9 Take ye the spoil of silver, take the spoil of gold: ‖ for there is none end of the store and glory out of all the † pleasant furniture.

12 The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin.

Before CHRIST about 713.

13 Behold, I am against thee, saith the LORD of hosts, and I will burn her chariots in the smoke, and the sword shall devour thy young lions: and I will cut off thy prey from the earth, and the voice of thy messengers shall no more be heard.

5. He shall recount his worthies: &c.] The king of Nineveh shall muster his choicest troops, but they shall be disordered and discomfited. W. Lowth.

6. The gates of the rivers shall be opened, &c.] According to this, Diodorus informs us, "that there was an old prophecy that Nineveh should not be taken till the river became an enemy to the city; and in the third year of the siege, the river being swoln with continual rains, overflowed part of the city, and broke down the wall for twenty furlongs; then the king, thinking that the oracle was fulfilled and the river become an enemy to the city, built a large funeral pile in the palace, and, collecting together all his wealth, and his concubines, and eunuchs, burnt himself and the palace with them all; and the enemy entered the breach that the waters had made, and took the city." What was therefore predicted in the first chapter was literally fulfilled, "with an overrunning flood He will make an utter end of the place thereof," ver. 8. Bp. Newton.

7. — Huzzab] By this word the Chaldee understands the queen of Nineveh: but it probably means Nineveh itself, for it denotes a strong and impregnable fortress. W. Lowth.

—— tabering upon their breasts.] Beating on their breasts in great anguish, as if they were playing on a tabret. Harmer.

8. But Nineveh is of old like a pool of water:] So called perhaps from the multitude of its inhabitants. Grotius.

9. Take ye the spoil of silver, &c.] Go then, ye Babylonians, take ye the spoil of the silver and gold, which the fearful citizens have left behind them. Bp. Hall. The Prophet here promises the enemy much spoil of gold and silver: and we read in Diodorus, that Arbaces carried many talents of gold and silver to Ecbatana, the royal city of the Medes. Bp. Newton.

11. Where is the dwelling of the lions, &c.] Where now is the place that was the feared dwelling of the lion-like Assyrians? What is become of the place where the old lion, even the tyrants of Assyria, walked, and where his princes made themselves so secure, that nothing could affright them? Bp. Hall.

13. — the voice of thy messengers shall no more be heard.] Thou shalt no more send ambassadours to distant countries, either to encourage thine allies, or to terrify thine enemies. See Isai. xviii. 2. W. Lowth.

Chap. III. In this chapter the Prophet denounces war against Nineveh for her perfidy and violence; and strongly places before our eyes the number of her chariots and cavalry, her burnished arms, and the great and unrelenting slaughter which she spread around her, ver. 1—3. He assigns her idolatries as one cause of her ignominious and unpitied fall, ver. 4—7. He describes No Amon, her rival in populousness, confederacies, and situation, as sharing a like fate with herself, ver. 8—11; and beautifully illustrates the ease with which her strong holds should be taken, ver. 12; and the feebleness of her people during the siege, ver. 13. He pronounces that all her preparations, her numbers, her opulence, her multitude of chief men, would be of no avail, ver. 14—17. He foretells that her tributaries would desert her, ver. 18. He concludes with a triumphant exclamation, the topicks of which are the greatness and incurableness of her wound, and the just triumph of others over her, on account of her extensive oppressions, ver. 19. Abp. Newcome.

Ver. 1. — the prey departeth not;] They are still carrying on their conquests, and never cease to get new spoils from such as they newly conquer. Dr. Wells.

3. — their corpses;] The dead bodies slain by them. These three verses are a description of Nineveh, as it was in the time of the Prophet. Abp. Newcome. Or else they are prophetical of the enemy coming against it: and then the sense will be, Vengeance is near thee: I do already hear the noise of the Babylonian whips, in the hands of the charioteers, driving furiously against thee, &c. Bp. Hall. See chap. ii. 3, 4; and compare Jer. xlvii. 3. W. Lowth.

14 Draw thee waters for the siege, fortify thy strong holds: go into clay, and tread the morter, make strong the brickkiln.

15 There shall the fire devour thee; the sword shall cut thee off, it shall eat thee up like the cankerworm: make thyself many as the cankerworm, make thyself many as the locusts.

‖ Or, valiant ones.

—— that selleth nations through her whoredoms, &c.] That makes whole nations a prey to their enemies, by teaching them the arts of softness and effeminacy, and so rendering them weak and defenceless. "Families" are equivalent to kingdoms: see the note on Jer. i. 15; and compare Amos iii. 2; Zech. xiv. 18. W. Lowth.

5.— I will discover thy skirts &c.] See the note on Jer. xiii. 22.

8.— populous No,] Or No Amon, as in the margin; a city of Egypt. See Ezek. xxx. 14, 15; Jer. xlvi. 25. Bochart thinks it Diospolis near Mendes, which appears from Strabo to have been situated near lakes. Herodotus says, that the Egyptians called Jupiter by the name of Amon. Channels of water from the Nile may have passed through this city. Lakes are called "seas" by the Hebrews. Abp. Newcome. See the note on Jer. xlvi. 25.

—— her wall] Her waters were as strong a defence to No, as the proud walls of Nineveh were to her. Dr. Stokes.

9.— Put] The African Nomades are here meant. Abp. Newcome. See the map of the dispersion and settling of nations.

10. Yet was she carried away,] The Prophet may refer to a past taking of No by Sennacherib. Dean Prideaux.

11. Thou also shalt be drunken: thou shalt be hid,] Even so thou also, O Nineveh, shalt drink deep of the cup of God's vengeance: thou, that wast once renowned over the world, shalt be glad to be wrapped up in obscurity and forgetfulness. Bp. Hall.

12. All thy strong holds shall be like fig trees &c.] As ripe figs drop off when they are shaken, so shall thy strong holds fall into the hands of the enemy, upon the first assault. W. Lowth. The image, though a common one, is very lively and expressive. Abp. Newcome.

13.— the fire shall devour thy bars.] See chap. i. 5; ii. 6. According to these prophecies the city was to be destroyed by fire and water: and we see in Diodorus, that by fire and water it was destroyed. See the note on chap. ii. 6. Bp. Newton.

14. Draw thee waters for the siege, &c.] Go to then, furnish thyself with provision for a siege; fill thy cisterns with water; fortify thy strong holds; make ready store of bricks, to repair thy battered walls. Bp. Hall. Though the wall of the city bordered on the river, it might not be safe to water there within reach of the enemy's missile weapons and engines. Abp. Newcome.

15.— it shall eat thee up like the cankerworm:] Either, the enemy shall eat thee up as easily as the cankerworm eats the green herb; or, thou shalt as soon be devoured as cankerworms are destroyed by storms, rain, fire, or change of weather. Poole.

16. Thou hast multiplied thy merchants] Neither art thou any better for those multitudes of merchants, that pertain unto thee: for they, like to those cankerworms, when they have spoiled what they may in their deceitful trade, fly away from thee, and leave thee destitute. So also ver. 17. Bp. Hall.

17. Thy crowned are as the locusts,] Thy rulers. Bp. Hall. The word appears to signify the officers in the Ninevites' army. These the Prophet compares to locusts and grashoppers. W. Lowth. On cold days the locusts lie inactive in the inclosures of fertile spots: but on the shining of the sun, which dries their wings and enables them to fly, they disappear. The word "grashoppers," though not accurate, we are obliged to use for variety. The Hebrews have many names for the different species of locusts. Abp. Newcome.

18. Thy shepherds slumber, O king of Assyria:] Diodorus Siculus, speaking of the siege in which Nineveh fell, says, that when the enemy had shut up the king in the city, many nations revolted, each going over to the besieger, for the sake of their liberty: that the king despatched messengers to all his subjects, requiring forces from them to assist him: and that he thought himself able to endure the siege, and remained in expectation of the armies which were to be raised throughout the empire; relying on an oracle, that the city could not be taken till the river should become its enemy. Abp. Newcome.

† Heb. wrinkling. 19 There is no † healing of thy bruise; thy wound is grievous: all that hear the bruit of thee shall clap the hands over thee: for upon whom hath not thy wickedness passed continually. Before CHRIST about 713.

19. There is no healing of thy bruise;] In this passage, as well as in chap. i. 8, and ii. 11, 13, the Prophet foretells the total and entire destruction of this city. The Prophet Zephaniah likewise, in the days of Josiah king of Judah, foretells the same sad event, chap. ii. 13—15. But what probability was there, that the capital city of a great kingdom, a city which was sixty miles in circumference, a city which contained so many thousand inhabitants, a city which had walls, according to Diodorus Siculus, a hundred feet high, and so thick that three chariots could go abreast upon them, and fifteen hundred towers at proper distances in the walls of two hundred feet in height: what probability was there that such a city should ever be totally destroyed? And yet so totally was it destroyed, that the place where it was situated is hardly known.

The city was taken and destroyed by the Medes and Babylonians: and what probably helped to complete its ruin and devastation was the enlarging and beautifying of Babylon soon after by Nebuchadnezzar. From that time no mention is made of Nineveh by any of the sacred writers: and the most ancient of the heathen authors, who have occasion to say any thing about it, speak of it as a city that was once great and flourishing, but now destroyed and desolate. Great as it was formerly, so little of it was remaining that authors are not agreed even about its situation: probably we may conclude, from the general suffrage of ancient historians and geographers, that it was situated upon the river Tigris: but yet no less authors than Ctesias and Diodorus Siculus represent it as situated on the river Euphrates. Lucian, who flourished in the second century after Christ, affirms, that Nineveh was utterly perished, and there was no footstep of it remaining, nor could you tell where it was once situated: and the greater regard is to be paid to Lucian's testimony, as he was a native of Samosata, a city upon the river Euphrates; and coming from a neighbouring country, he must in all likelihood have known whether there were any remains of Nineveh or not. There is at this time a city called Mosul, situate upon the western side of the Tigris, and on the opposite eastern shore are ruins of a great extent, which are said to be the ruins of Nineveh. But it is more than probable, that these ruins are the remains of the Persian Nineveh, built between the third and the seventh century after Christ, and not of the Assyrian. Even the ruins of old Nineveh have been, as I may say, long ago ruined and destroyed; such "an utter end" hath been made of it, and such is the truth of the Divine predictions! Bp. Newton.

HABAKKUK.

INTRODUCTION.

SOME writers, whose relations are probably founded on traditionary accounts, describe Habakkuk as a native of Bethzakar; and affirm, that he was of the tribe of Simeon. Some suppose him to have flourished in the reign of Manasseh; others in that of Josiah; and some have placed him so late as Zedekiah: but the most approved opinion is, that he prophesied under Jehoiakim, who ascended the throne in the year of the world 3395, and reigned over Judah eleven years.

As the Prophet makes no mention of the Assyrians, and speaks of the Chaldean invasions as near at hand, chap. i. 5; ii. 3; iii. 2, 16—19, he probably lived after the destruction of the Assyrian empire in the fall of Nineveh, in the year of the world 3392, and not long before the devastation of Judea by the victories of Nebuchadnezzar. Habakkuk was then nearly contemporary with, and predicted the same events as Jeremiah; and he probably lived to witness the completion of that part of his prophecy which related to the afflictions of his country. Dr. Gray.

The Prophet Habakkuk stands high in the class of the Hebrew poets. The beautiful connexion between the parts of his prophecy, its diction, imagery, spirit, and sublimity, cannot be too much admired. Abp. Newcome.

It should seem from the title prefixed, and from the intimation subjoined to the lest verse of the Prayer in the third chapter, as well as from the word Selah, which occurs three times in the chapter, that the Prayer was set to musick; and perhaps performed in the service of the temple; and it was possibly delivered in a kind of measure. The style of the whole book is poetical; but more especially this beautiful and perfect ode, which is decorated with every kind of imagery and poetical embellishment. Habakkuk is imitated by succeeding Prophets, and is cited as an inspired person by the Evangelical writers, Heb. x. 37, 38; Rom. i. 17; Gal. iii. 11; Acts xiii. 41; compared with Hab. i. 5. Dr. Gray.

Chap. I. ver. 2. O Lord, how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear!] The Prophet proposes the common objections against Providence, taken from the prosperity of the wicked, and the oppression of the righteous, which has been a stumblingblock even to good men. See Jer. xii. 1; Job xii. 6; xxi. 7; Ps. xxxvii, and lxxiii. W. Lowth.

5. Behold ye among the heathen, &c.] But, to take away the ground of all this complaint, behold, O ye degenerated people of the Jews, and look upon those heathens whom ye hate and contemn; and wonder at that, which I will bring to pass by their hands against you, even a work, which to your incredulity and self-confidence will appear incredible. Bp. Hall.

6. — I raise up the Chaldeans, that bitter and hasty nation,] Who shall make several incursions into Judea, and at last utterly conquer it. See 2 Kings xxiv, xxv. They are here said to be cruel in their temper, and vigorous in their warlike enterprises; compare ver. 8. W. Lowth.

The Prophet, having set forth the deplorable state of his nation by reason of their incorrigible sins, here proceeds to denounce the sword of God's judgments, which was unsheathing against them, and points out the quarter whence it appeared. Reading.

successively, and thus overspreading New Servia, burning the villages, corn, and fodder, and carrying off the inhabitants and cattle," &c. Harmer.

9. They shall come all for violence: &c.] They shall come purposely to waste and spoil: their very looks shall blast all before them, like an east wind: and they shall carry away a number of captives, as the sand of the sea for multitude. Bp. Hall.

10. — they shall heap dust, and take it.] They shall cast up mounds against the strong holds, and so take them: see Jer. xxxii. 24; xxxiii. 4. W. Lowth.

11. Then shall his mind change, &c.] This may be spoken of the Chaldean nation at large. Abp. Newcome.

12. Art thou not from everlasting, &c.] The Prophet, having had this revelation from God, that the Chaldeans should be the ministers of His vengeance against sinful Judah, falls into an holy expostulation with Him about these dispensations. As if he had said, O everlasting God, whose word is unchangeable as Thyself; "Thou art of purer eyes, than to behold evil" in Thine own chosen people; why hast Thou ordained these Chaldeans for their judges, a faithless race of men, who without scruple devour those that are more righteous than themselves, and prey upon them as freely as the fisherman, who takes all that comes to his net; and after all the victories which Thou givest them, they have no notion of Thy providence, but impute their success to the power and wisdom of their own false gods? Reading.

13. Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil,] The holy and pure nature of God is at the greatest distance from evil, and at the greatest contrariety to it. He is so far from having any inclination to evil, that it is the only thing in the world, to which He hath an irreconcilable antipathy. This the Scripture frequently declares to us, and that in a very emphatical manner. Ps. v. 4: "Thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness: neither shall evil dwell with Thee." The words are a diminution, and less is said than is intended by them: the meaning is, that God is so far from taking pleasure in sin, that He hath a perfect hatred and abhorrence of it. And here in the Prophet Habakkuk, "Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity." As, when men hate a thing to the highest degree, they turn away their eyes, and cannot endure to look upon it. Light and darkness are not more opposite to one another, than the holy nature of God is to sin. "What communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial?" 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15. Abp. Tillotson.

16. Therefore they sacrifice unto their net, &c.] They boast themselves in their strength, and deify themselves for their valour. Abp. Newcome.

17. Shall they therefore empty their net, &c.] Wilt Thou therefore, O Lord, still suffer them to empty their net for a new draught? Wilt Thou not restrain them from making spoil of the nations round about continually? Bp. Hall.

Chap. II. To the expostulation, which closes the former chapter, the Prophet tells us here in the second, that he waited most attentively for the answer of God, and received it with a command to write it upon tables so plain, "that he may run that readeth it," or may easily run it over without hesitation, it being so legible. And the substance of the Divine answer is this: That the Chaldeans were indeed such men, as the Prophet had represented them; and that therefore, when God had used them as rods for the chastisement of His people, He would throw them into the fire and utterly consume them. This burden of the Babylonians begins at the fifth verse. The low and shameful condition, into which the king of Babylon should sink, is described in the following verses by the remarks, which his conquered and captive nations should make upon him, "taking up a taunting proverb against him, and saying, Woe to him that increaseth that which is not his!" &c. Reading.

Ver. 1. I will stand upon my watch, — tower, &c.] It was the business of a watchman in the time of war to descry from an eminent station what messengers were coming, and to make known the message as soon as possible: see 2 Kings ix. 17, &c. The Prophet puts himself in such a posture, that he may receive God's answer to the foregoing complaints. W. Lowth.

2. — make it plain upon tables,] Things were written on tables of wood, stone, or brass, on purpose to preserve the knowledge of them to posterity: these tables were hung up in publick places, for the cognizance of every person, that frequented those places; as laws and treaties were wont to be posted up in temples and market-houses, where was the greatest concourse of people. Bp. Chandler.

—— that he may run that readeth it.] Let the characters be so legible, that one, who hastily passes on, may read them. This may have been a proverbial expression. Abp. Newcome.

For this vision is not presently to be fulfilled, but hath a time set and determined, wherein it shall be accomplished: at the expiring whereof it shall be manifestly verified to the world. Bp. Hall.

4. Behold, his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him: &c.] In any case, give thou full belief to this word of the Lord: for behold, that man who withdraweth his soul from trusting unto God, and will be raising to himself projects of his own, as he is unsound and faithless to God, so is he accordingly displeasing to Him: but the just and upright man will depend upon the promises of God, and speed thereafter; for his faith in God shall both uphold his life here, and crown it with glory hereafter. Bp. Hall.

—— the just shall live by his faith.] A Christian's life is a life of faith, according to this saying of the Prophet, which is thrice quoted by the Apostle, with reference to the life that now is, as well as that which is to come. As it is by faith that the just shall come to heaven, and live there, so it is by faith that they live here upon earth too. And it is their living by faith upon earth whereby they come to live in heaven. There they live by sight and not by faith: but that we shall never do, except we first live by faith and not by sight. Bp. Beveridge.

5. Yea also, because he transgresseth by wine, &c.] Know therefore, that this proud Babylonian, under whom thy nation shall suffer, shall at last be punished in his own kind, &c. Bp. Hall. The Prophet, having assured the Jews of a deliverance in God's appointed time, proceeds now to denounce His judgment against the Babylonian monarchy, speaking of it as comprised under one person at the head of it: see the note upon chap. i. 11. Here he describes him as one intoxicated with his successes, and not knowing how to set any bounds to his ambition; but still as his conquests enlarge, his desire of having more increases. Hell or death, and the grave, are proverbial emblems of an insatiable temper: see Prov. xxvii. 20; xxx. 16. W. Lowth.

—— he is a proud man,] That is, he is intoxicated with his power and dominion; compare Dan. iv. 30: "neither keepeth at home," meaning, that the king of Babylon confines not himself to a peaceable settlement or residence in his own dominions; but "who," as it follows, "enlargeth his desire as hell," &c. Parkhurst.

6. — ladeth himself with thick clay!] His gold and silver, which is nothing originally but earth or clay, shall turn to no benefit, but be rather his burden; adding weight to his sins and punishment. W. Lowth.

8. — because of men's blood,] Shed by thee. "The land" is the land of Judea: "the city," the city of Jerusalem. Abp. Newcome. "The violence of the land," or "against the land:" as in Joel iii. 19; Obad. ver. 10. Abp. Secker.

11. For the stone shall cry out of the wall, &c.] For, if men shall hold their peace, the very stones out of the wall, which thou hast raised by this cruelty, shall cry out against thee; and the beam out of the timber-work shall second this clamour against thine injustice and violence. Bp. Hall.

13. — is it not of the Lord of hosts &c.] The foregoing and the following verses contain the denunciations of God's judgments upon Babylon, for her pride and cruelty, her luxury and idolatry. And this is an answer to Habakkuk's expostulation, why God punished Israel by the sword of the Chaldeans: it was not that He exalted that people for any superiour worth in them; for, on the contrary, they were now almost ripe for destruction, and should survive their triumphs over the Jews but a very short time. For, saith he, "is it not of the Lord of hosts that the people shall labour in the very fire," or rather shall labour for that which shall be fuel for the fire, "and weary themselves for very vanity?" meaning, that all the pains, the Chaldeans took in enlarging and beautifying their famous Babylon, should be soon lost in the flames that should consume it, even as they had consumed the cities of Judah. Reading.

14. For the earth shall be filled &c.] God's power and providence shall be widely displayed in the destruction of Babylon, in the humiliation of Nebuchadnezzar, and in the captivity and restoration of His people. Abp. Newcome. Especially as these events are described in the Prophets, as earnests and types of God's judgments upon His enemies, and His favour to His Church under the Gospel. W. Lowth.

15, 16. Woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink, &c.] Grotius justly observes, that these two verses contain an allegory. The Chaldeans gave to the neighbouring nations the cup of idolatry and of deceitful alliance; and in return they received from Jehovah the cup of His fury. Abp. Newcome.

—— and the spoil of beasts, which made them afraid,] The relative "which," added by our translators, obscures the passage, which might be more plainly rendered, "The spoil of beasts shall make them, or make thee afraid;" as the Septuagint and Chaldee read the text, with very little alteration. W. Lowth. Surely the violence done to Lebanon shall cover thee, and the destruction of beasts shall make thee afraid. Abp. Newcome. The cause here assigned for the destruction of the Chaldeans, is their cruelty against the people of God, and the spoiling of all Judea, which is here figuratively signified under the name of Lebanon. Danæus.

18. — the molten image, and a teacher of lies,] The image teaches lies, or gives false notions of the Deity. Abp. Secker.

20. But the Lord is in his holy temple: &c.] That is, The Lord is He, of whom alone we are to ask happiness: His holy temple the place, where alone we are to find it. This is the right aim, this is the true end of man. Whereas he, that seeks felicity in the creature, looks for it in the wrong place: he, that asks it from a false god, applies to one that hath it not to give. "Let all the earth" then, this vain world and all its vain pretences to felicity, "keep silence before God;" while all false objects of worship, and all worshippers of false gods, stand mute before Him; convicted and convinced that the dispensing of happiness, as well as the punishing of the guilty, is the sole prerogative of God; that without holiness none can see Him; without seeing Him none can be happy.

This chapter may be considered as a vindication of the wisdom and justice of God in the government of the world: particularly in that seeming inequality of His providence towards good and bad men in this life, which has so often staggered the reason, and sometimes the faith, of many pious persons. We are here taught, that the certain consequence of all vice and wickedness is shame and misery. "Woe," or punishment, is the constant attendant on every sin: how slow soever its pace may be, it never fails to overtake it: so that however evil men may happen to flourish, it is but for a time. "The prosperity of fools shall destroy them," Prov. i. 32. Their very success in sin shall prove their destruction. This consideration must therefore compel us to conclude, that such persons are so far from being happy in their most prosperous state, and so far beneath our envy or applause, that they justly merit our pity and compassion, as of all men the most miserable. Wogan.

Chap. III. ver. 1. A prayer of Habakkuk the prophet upon Shigionoth.] Or, as the marginal reading explains it, "according to the tunes, called in Hebrew, Shigionoth;" which were musical compositions used in the publick service of the temple. Compare the title of Ps. vii. It is called a prayer, because it begins in the form of a supplication; although the following parts are rather in the nature of an hymn or thanksgiving. W. Lowth. The word Shigionoth may denote a musical instrument of great compass, with which the Jews accompanied this piece of poetry. Abp. Newcome.

This chapter affords a remarkable instance of that sublimity which is peculiar to the ode, and which is principally owing to a bold and yet easy digression or transition. The Prophet, foreseeing the judgments of God, the calamities which were to befall his country from the Chaldeans, and afterwards the punishments which awaited the Chaldeans themselves; partly struck with terrour, and partly inspirited by confidence in the Divine mercy, beseeches God that He would hasten the redemption and deliverance of His people, ver. 2. Perceiving at once the similarity between the Babylonish and Egyptian captivities, and how much the deliverance experienced under the latter would animate the hopes of a second similar deliverance; he does not dwell on particular resemblances, but bursts out at once with unexpected impetuosity, in allusion to the Egyptian deliverance, "God came from Teman," &c. He preserves throughout the whole passage the same magnificence with which he begins, choosing the noblest images which so copious a subject could supply, and illustrating them with the most splendid colours, and in the most elevated style. The singular elegance of the conclusion crowns the magnificence of the whole; and, were it not that antiquity here and there throws a veil of obscurity over it, there could not be conceived a more perfect and masterly poem of the kind. Bp. Lowth.

2. O Lord, I have heard thy speech, and was afraid: &c.] O Lord, I have heard the words spoken by Thee, concerning the future captivity of Thy people, and was much troubled with them: and now, O Lord, since they must lie under this grievous affliction for a time, make good upon them the work of Thy gracious preservation of them; uphold them, while those years of their misery continue; let Thy merciful protection be made known to the world. Bp. Hall.

3. God came from Teman, &c.] Bp. Lowth observes, that this is a sudden burst of poetry, in the true spirit of the ode: the concealed connexion being, that God, who had formerly displayed such power in delivering the Israelites from Egyptian slavery, might succour their posterity in a like wonderful manner; and the enthusiasm of the poet leading him to neglect all obvious ways of entering on his subject. Verses 3—7 contain a sublime description of God, when He conducted His people to the land of Canaan. The grandest circumstances are selected, and the diction is as splendid as the subjects. Abp. Newcome.

The captivity brought to mind the Exodus, or deliverance of the Israelites out of bondage; and that He who had delivered could again deliver His people. Abp. Secker.

4. —he had horns coming out of his hand: &c.] The Hebrew word signifies, both "horns," and "rays of light:" see Exod. xxxiv. 29, 30. The marginal reading here is to be preferred, "He had bright beams coming out of His side." The symbol of the Divine presence had rays of light issuing out on every side; and yet that was but an hiding or veil to the Divine Majesty, who "covereth Himself with light as with a garment," Ps. civ. 2. W. Lowth.

5. Before him went the pestilence,] To execute vengeance on His enemies; such as Pharaoh, &c. W. Lowth. See Numb. xi. 33; xiv. 37; xvi. 46. It was occasionally inflicted on the Israelites for their guilt. Abp. Newcome. See the note on Jer. xlvii. 6.

6. —the everlasting mountains were scattered, &c.] The mountains and hills are said to quake at God's presence, Nahum i. 5: so here the whole land of Canaan is said to tremble, and even the mountains themselves, the most solid and impregnable parts of it, because the hearts of the stoutest of the old inhabitants fainted and lost their courage: see Josh. ii. 24. W. Lowth.

—— his ways are everlasting.] So dreadful and glorious is God for ever, in the manifestation of Himself to His creatures. Bp. Hall.

7. I saw the tents of Cushan in affliction: &c.] I saw the neighbouring nations of the Arabians and Ethiopians in great distress; and the Midianites trembling under the expectations of His judgments, which He was ready to bring on them, in the behalf of His people. Bp. Hall.

—— the curtains of the land of Midian] The coverings of their tents. Abp. Newcome.

8. Was the Lord displeased against the rivers? &c.] When God dried up the channel of the Red sea, Exod. xiv. 22, and afterward that of the river Jordan, Josh. iii. 16, 17, it was not out of any displeasure against the waters, but for the safety of His people, for whose deliverance He appeared in as illustrious a manner, as if He had been seen riding in the clouds, and carried upon the wings of the wind, as in a chariot: compare Isai. xix. 1; Ps. lxviii. 4; civ. 3; Deut. xxxiii. 26. W. Lowth.

9. Thy bow was made quite naked, according to the oaths of the tribes, even thy word.] Thou didst draw forth and bend the bow of Thy mighty power among Thine enemies, according to the oaths, which Thou swarest to the tribes of Israel, even the word of promise, which Thou gavest them to settle them in that good land. Bp. Hall. The question asked in a very bold and poetical manner, ver. 8, is here answered: that God displayed His power to deliver His people according to His faithful word. Abp. Newcome.

The Oriental bows were wont to be carried in a case, hung to the girdle: hence the phrase of making the bow naked. Sir J. Chardin.

—— Thou didst cleave the earth with rivers.] Thou didst cleave the hard rocks and the earth about them, and make the waters run down in a great stream or channel. Ps. lxxviii. 15, 16; cv. 41. W. Lowth.

The passage through the Red sea having been beautifully mentioned in an indirect manner, ver. 8, the Prophet continues his magnificent description of the Deity, ver. 10—12, and adds the reason, why such power was displayed, in the former part of the thirteenth verse. Abp. Newcome.

10. The mountains saw thee, and they trembled:] Mount Sinai, and the adjoining hills, felt the effects of Thy presence. W. Lowth.

—— the overflowing of the water passed by:] The water came out of the rock in such quantity, that it ran along like an overflowing river. Dr. Wells. Or, the overflowing streams of the Red sea and the Jordan passed backward in their channels. Bp. Hall.

11. —at the light of thine arrows they went, &c.] The instruments of destruction, which God employed, are metaphorically called His arrows and spear. Abp. Newcome.

13. —thou woundedst the head out of the house of the wicked,] The ardour of the Prophet having led him to begin in the midst of his subject, ver. 3, he here returns to what passed in Egypt before the dividing of the Red sea, the mention of which astonishing miracle he repeats, ver. 15. In this verse he refers to the destruction of the firstborn in Egypt. Abp. Newcome.

—— by discovering the foundation unto the neck.] By undermining them from bottom to top. W. Lowth. The death of the firstborn is figuratively called the utter overthrow of the Egyptian houses. Abp. Newcome.

14. Thou didst strike through with his staves the head of his villages:] The Prophet amplifies the former benefit of God, that for the preservation of His Church He destroyed the firstborn of the Egyptians, not only in the cities and towns, but also in the country: because that the inhabitants of the country, as well as those in the cities, raged against the people of God with deceit and violence, and would have delighted to devour and consume them. The Prophet speaks in the person of the pious man: I shall rest secure under the Divine protection, when the Chaldeans shall come to invade Judea. See the two following verses. W. Lowth.

And in the nineteenth verse he may speak in the person of his people, who were to be restored. Abp. Newcome. See the note on Ps. xviii. 33.

19. — To the chief singer] Or, musician. This hymn was designed to be sung in the temple service; see ver. 1; and for that purpose was delivered to the chief musician, to be set to musical notes: compare the title of the fourth Psalm. The direction "to the chief singer on my stringed instruments" might probably be given by order of king Josiah. W. Lowth.

CHAP. II.....21st Sunday after Trinity,.....Morning.

ZEPHANIAH.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Prophet Zephaniah informs us, that he was the son of Cushi; and that the word of the Lord came to him in the days of Josiah king of Judah. He is supposed to have been of the tribe of Simeon; and as he traces back his pedigree for four generations, he was doubtless of noble birth: though not of the royal family, as some have imagined from the resemblance between the names of Hezekiah and that of Hizkiah, from whom the Prophet professes himself to have been a descendant; the period which intervened between king Hezekiah and the time in which Zephaniah flourished, being scarce sufficient to admit of three intermediate ancestors to the Prophet.

Zephaniah begins with denouncing God's wrath against "the remnant of Baal, and the name of the Chemarims:" against "them which worshipped the host of heaven, and swore by Malcham;" and therefore probably he addressed those idolatrous priests who were not yet extirpated by the religious zeal of Josiah; compare Zeph. i. 4, 5—9 with 2 Kings xxiii. 5, 6, 12, &c.: he foretold also the destruction of Nineveh, which happened in the year of the world 3392. And upon these considerations he may be supposed to have prophesied before the last reformation made by Josiah, in the year of the world 3381. He may be conceived also to have entered on his office towards the commencement of the reign of that monarch, who ascended the throne in the year of the world 3364, since he preceded Jeremiah, who began his prophetick ministry in the thirteenth year of Josiah's reign. Epiphanius relates, that Zephaniah was born at mount Sacabatha, or Bacatha.

Zephaniah and Jeremiah resemble each other so much in those parts where they treat of the idolatries and wickedness that prevailed in their times, that St. Isidore asserts, that Zephaniah was the abbreviator of Jeremiah: but he apparently prophesied before Jeremiah; he seems to have concurred with Josiah in his righteous design of bringing back the people to the worship and obedience of the true God.

The style of Zephaniah is poetical; but it is not distinguished by any peculiar elegance or beauty, though generally animated and impressive. Dr. Gray.

Chap. I. ver. 1. The word of the Lord which came unto Zephaniah] This prophecy contains partly threatenings, and partly comforts. Threatenings of God concerning the destruction of Jerusalem very shortly to ensue, and concerning the most grievous punishments of the Jews, both for their impiety towards God, and for their injustice towards men. Yet because the Lord allowed an interval before the accomplishment of His judgments, the Prophet exhorts the Jews to mitigate the Divine wrath by earnest repentance and amendment of life. He also comforts the Church by promises, that God will not utterly cast it away and destroy it, but will leave some seed of it, because He had determined to gather it from among the Gentiles, and to sanctify it in Christ and for Christ's sake. The book contains three discourses, which are comprised in the same number of chapters. Danæus.

3. I will consume man and beast;] A general desolation is threatened, by enumerating the particulars that shall be involved in it. See the note on Hos. iv. 3. W. Lowth. What is said in Hosea of a great drought, may be applied to this place: and what is here said, may be added to what is said there. Dr. Wells.

—— and the stumblingblocks with the wicked;] I will destroy those abominable idols, which have been stumblingblocks to their followers; together with their idolatrous worshippers. Bp. Hall. Idols are called "the stumblingblocks of iniquity," Ezek. vii. 19; xiv. 3, 4. W. Lowth.

4. —the remnant of Baal] Those that remain of the worshippers of Baal. Bp. Hall, Dr. Wells. Or, those altars or places of worship dedicated to the service of Baal, which escaped the reformation of king Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 6. Compare Jer. iii. 6. W. Lowth.

—— the name of the Chemarims with the priests;] That is, of the idolatrous priests of Baal, together with the corrupt priests of My sanctuary. Bp. Hall. The word "Chemarim" is rendered "priests," Hos. x. 5; there being no mention made of other priests, as there is here. Dr. Wells.

5. —them that worship the host of heaven upon the housetops;] Where altars were raised for the worship of the heavenly host in their brightness. See 2 Kings xxiii. 5, 12; Jer. xix. 13; xxxii. 29. Abp. Newcome.

jealous God," and will not admit of any rival in His worship. See Hos. iv. 15; Amos v. 26; 2 Kings xvii. 33. Malcham is the same with Moloch, to whom the people of Judah continued to offer their children, as Jeremiah upbraids them, chap. vii. 31; xix. 5; notwithstanding the reformation made by Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 10. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

7. —for the Lord hath prepared a sacrifice, he hath bid his guests.] The slaughter of the wicked is called "a sacrifice," because it is in some sense an atonement to God's justice: compare Isai. xxxiv. 6; Jer. xlvi. 10; Ezek. xxxix. 17; Rev. xix. 17. The latter part of the sentence alludes to the custom of those that offered sacrifice, which was to invite their friends to partake of the feast which accompanied it. So God will call the Chaldeans to have a share in this slaughter. W. Lowth.

8. —strange apparel.] There were peculiar vestments belonging to the worship of each idol; see 2 Kings x. 22. So in aftertimes there were peculiar habits belonging to the priests of Saturn, and the priestesses of Ceres. The text may likewise be explained of such men as wore women's apparel, and such women as wore that belonging to men: which was contrary to an express law, Deut. xxii. 5, and was a rite observed in the worship of some idols. W. Lowth.

9. —those that leap on the threshold,] Or rather, "leap over the threshold." The expression probably denotes some idolatrous rite, like that which was practised in the temple of Dagon, where the "priests did not tread upon the threshold," 1 Sam. v. 5. To this sense the Chaldee Paraphrast interprets it of those that walk after the laws or rites of the Philistines. Others expound it of those who enter into other men's houses, and take away their goods by violence, according to what follows: "which fill their masters' houses with violence and deceit." W. Lowth.

This leaping over the thresholds may allude to the servants of the great men, riding into people's houses, and, having gained admission by deceit, forcing from the inhabitants by violence considerable contributions. Such a practice prevails at this time among the Arabs and the Persians. Harmer, Parkhurst.

10. —the fish gate,] The gate which stood near the fish market: see 2 Chron. xxxiii. 14; Nehem. iii. 3. "The second" should rather be "the middle part of the city:" it is that part of Jerusalem mentioned 2 Kings xxii. 14; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 22. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

——a great crashing from the hills.] From the mountains of Zion and Moriah, whereon the temple and the king's palace were built. See 2 Chron. iii. 1. W. Lowth.

11. —Maktesh,] A part or street of Jerusalem. The Chaldee interprets it of the inhabitants near the brook Cedron. W. Lowth. A valley in Jerusalem, which divided the upper from the lower city. This is agreeable to the etymology of the word, which signifies a hollow place. Abp. Newcome.

——all they that bear silver] All those rich men, which had wont to drive a great trade with their silver. Bp. Hall. The rich merchants in general, or the money-changers in particular, may be meant. Abp. Newcome.

12. —with candles,] That is, thoroughly and diligently. See Luke xv. 8. Abp. Newcome. This is said to signify the exactness with which God pries into the most inward and secret parts, so that nothing can escape His search. Bp. Sanderson.

——that are settled on their lees:] Which have hardened themselves with resolutions of wickedness, and have determinately settled themselves to live in their known sins. Bp. Hall.

14—16. The great day of the Lord] The great day of God's revenge upon Jerusalem is near at hand. Bp. Hall. The topick of approaching calamity from Jehovah is often insisted on in the Prophets; but no where probably with such a beautiful amplification as in these three verses. Abp. Newcome.

17. —like blind men,] Not knowing whither to go, or which way to take for safety. Compare Deut. xxviii. 29; Isai. lix. 10. W. Lowth.

18. —the fire of his jealousy:] God's vengeance is frequently compared to fire: see Nahum i. 6. This shall consume the land and its inhabitants for their heinous offences, and chiefly for their idolatry; because that sin peculiarly intrenches upon God's honour, which is incommunicable to others; whence He is called "a jealous God," Exod. xx. 5; xxxiv. 14. W. Lowth.

We should reflect on the cause of these miseries, which befell the Jews. They had forsaken the Lord, and corrupted His wor-for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land.

CHAP. II.

1 An exhortation to repentance. 4 The judgment of the Philistines, 8 of Moab and Ammon, 12 of Ethiopia and Assyria.

‖ Or, not desirous.

GATHER yourselves together, yea, gather together, O nation ‖ not desired;

2 Before the decree bring forth, before the day pass as the chaff, before the fierce anger of the LORD come upon you, before the day of the LORD's anger come upon you.

3 Seek ye the LORD, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the LORD's anger.

4 ¶ For Gaza shall be forsaken, and Ashkelon a desolation: they shall drive out Ashdod at the noon day, and Ekron shall be rooted up.

5 Woe unto the inhabitants of the sea coasts, the nation of the Cherethites! the word of the LORD is against you; O Canaan, the land of the Philistines, I will even destroy thee, that there shall be no inhabitant.

6 And the sea coast shall be dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks.

Before CHRIST about 630.

7 And the coast shall be for the remnant of the house of Judah; they shall feed thereupon: in the houses of Ashkelon shall they lie down in the evening: ‖ for the LORD their God shall visit them, and turn away their captivity.

‖ Or, when, &c.

8 ¶ I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, whereby they have reproached my people, and magnified themselves against their border.

9 Therefore as I live, saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, even the breeding of nettles, and saltpits, and a perpetual desolation: the residue of my people shall spoil them, and the remnant of my people shall possess them.

10 This shall they have for their pride, because they have reproached and magnified themselves against the people of the LORD of hosts.

11 The LORD will be terrible unto them: for he will † famish all the gods of the earth; and men shall worship him, every one from his place, even all the isles of the heathen.

ship; and while they remained in this state of rebellion and impiety, they still flattered themselves that they were secure from danger, and that God would bring no evil upon them. Thus God punishes the obstinate and impenitent profanation of the Divine service, especially in those to whom He has in a particular manner made Himself known. Osterwald.

Chap. II. ver. 1. Gather yourselves together,] Assemble yourselves, in order to make a publick humiliation: see Joel ii. 16. W. Lowth. This chapter contains an exhortation to earnest repentance and amendment of their former life, to the end they may escape the threatened evils. For those whom God reproves, except the fault be in themselves, He means to save. Let men change their deeds, and I, saith the Lord, will change My purpose. And this exhortation is often repeated in the present chapter, to the end that those, who remained obstinate and stubborn, might be without excuse. Danæus.

—— O nation not desired;] "Not desired," that is, not regarded with favour. Abp. Newcome. The Greek and the Chaldee interpret it, "O nation, that will not receive instruction," and is not to be amended but by the discipline of God's judgments. W. Lowth.

2. Before the decree bring forth, &c.] Before the command of God bring forth all this heavy judgment upon you: before the day of your captivity come upon you, which is coming on with such speed and violence, as the chaff is driven with a strong wind. Bp. Hall.

4. For Gaza shall be forsaken, &c.] The Prophet digresses to foretell the fate of some cities and nations bordering on Judea, and hostile to her: and he then enlarges on the destruction of Nineveh, a city which had carried the ten tribes into captivity, and had often struck Jerusalem with terrour, ver. 4—15. Abp. Newcome.

—— at the noon day,] Openly before your eyes. Bp. Hall.

5. —Cherethites!] The Philistines, who live upon the coasts of the Mediterranean sea; called in Ezekiel, chap. xxv. 16, as well as here, Cherethites or Cherethims. W. Lowth.

—— O Canaan, the land of the Philistines,] The Canaanites, properly so called, are the same with the Philistines, and seated in that part of Palestine: see Josh. xiii. 3. W. Lowth.

6. And the sea coast shall be dwellings &c.] A proverbial description of an utter desolation: compare ver. 14, 15; and see the notes on Isai. vii. 25; xiii. 20. W. Lowth.

7. —they shall feed thereupon: &c.] These words allude to the foregoing verse. As the cities of Gaza, Ashkelon, &c. were places for the wild Arabs, or other wandering tribes, to pitch their tents and feed their flocks; so they shall hereafter become the settled habitations of the Jews: compare Isai. lxv. 10. W. Lowth.

—— in the evening:] After their captivity is past; as it were in the latter end of the day. Bp. Hall. This promise was partly fulfilled after the return of the Jews from Babylon, and may hereafter receive a further completion: see Obad. ver. 19, and the note there. W. Lowth.

9. —the residue of my people shall spoil them,] Judas Maccabeus and his brethren subdued the Ammonites, as appears from 1 Mac. v. 6. W. Lowth.

11. —he will famish all the gods of the earth;] He will deprive them of their worship and sacrifices, which the Gentiles thought to be the food of their gods: see Deut. xxxii. 38. W. Lowth. By "the earth" the Jews understood the great continent of all Asia and Africa, to which they had access by land: and by "the isles" they understood the places to which they sailed by sea, particularly all Europe. Sir Isaac Newton.

The Prophet here foretells the gradual fall of idolatry; and its deep, and at length deadly, wound by the spreading of the Gospel. Abp. Newcome.

—— every one from his place,] Or, "in his place." Men shall worship Him every where, and not only in Jerusalem: compare Mal. i. 11; John iv. 21. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 630.

12 ¶ Ye Ethiopians also, ye shall be slain by my sword.

13 And he will stretch out his hand against the north, and destroy Assyria; and will make Nineveh a desolation, and dry like a wilderness.

14 And flocks shall lie down in the midst of her, all the beasts of the nations: both the ‖ [a] cormorant and the bittern shall lodge in the ‖ upper lintels of it; their voice shall sing in the windows; desolation shall be in the thresholds: ‖ for he shall uncover the cedar work.

15 This is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly, that said in her heart, [b] I am, and there is none beside me: how is she become a desolation, a place for beasts to lie down in! every one that passeth by her shall hiss, and wag his hand.

[a] Isai. 34. 11.

[b] Isai. 47. 8.

CHAP. III.

1 A sharp reproof of Jerusalem for divers sins. 8 An exhortation to wait for the restoration of Israel, 14 and to rejoice for their salvation by God.

WOE to ‖ † her that is filthy and polluted, to the oppressing city!

2 She obeyed not the voice; she received not ‖ correction; she trusted not in the LORD; she drew not near to her God.

† Heb. craw.
‖ Or, instruction.

3 [a] Her princes within her are roaring lions; her judges are evening wolves; they gnaw not the bones till the morrow.

4 Her [b] prophets are light and treacherous persons: her priests have polluted the sanctuary, they have done [c] violence to the law.

5 The just LORD is in the midst thereof; he will not do iniquity: † every morning doth he bring his judgment to light, he faileth not; but the unjust knoweth no shame.

6 I have cut off the nations: their ‖ towers are desolate; I made their streets waste, that none passeth by: their cities are destroyed, so that there is no man, that there is none inhabitant.

7 I said, Surely thou wilt fear me, thou wilt receive instruction; so their dwelling should not be cut off, howsoever I punished them: but they rose early, and corrupted all their doings.

8 ¶ Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the LORD, until the day that I rise up to the prey: for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger: for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my [d] jealousy.

[d] Chap. 1. 18.

12. — by my sword.] By Nebuchadnezzar, who is a sword in My hand, that is, an instrument to execute My vengeance, Ps. xvii. 13. The Ethiopians seem to comprehend the Egyptians, whose confederates they were, and with whom they underwent the same fate, when Nebuchadnezzar conquered Egypt: see Jer. xlvi. 9; Ezek. xxx. 5, 9. W. Lowth.

13. — the north,] The Assyrians: so called because they used to invade Palestine through Syria from the north. For the same reason the Babylonians are spoken of as a northern enemy, Jer. i. 14; xlvi. 6, 10, 20, 24; Ezek. xxvi. 7. Abp. Newcome. See the note from Calmet on Jer. iv. 6.

—— dry like a wilderness.] Notwithstanding her many waters, (Nahum i. 4,) her situation shall become dry: the artificial channels being obstructed, and the waters of the river returning to their course. See Nahum ii. 8. Abp. Newcome.

14. — all the beasts of the nations:] The Chaldee interprets it, "the several kinds of wild beasts:" as if the Hebrew word, rendered "nations," were to be understood of the several species of wild beasts, as the word is used of several sorts of caterpillers, Joel i. 6. In like manner the ants are called "a people," Prov. xxx. 25. W. Lowth.

—— shall lodge in the upper lintels of it;] Or, according to the marginal reading, the "knops or chapiters." Sir John Chardin gives an instance of birds lodging on the capitals of forsaken temples and palaces, in his description of the magnificent pillars at Persepolis. "The storks make their nests on the tops of those columns with great boldness, and in no danger of being disturbed." Harmer.

—— he shall uncover the cedar work.] The fine carved work, or ceilings made of cedar, (see Jer. xxii. 14,) shall be exposed to the injuries of the weather, and so quickly come to ruin. W. Lowth. This reference to the former elegance of the city is finely introduced: and in the next verse the grand and affecting description of her desolate state is beautifully contrasted with her former festivity and pride. Abp. Newcome.

15. — how is she become a desolation,] See the note on Nahum iii. 19.

3. — they gnaw not the bones till the morrow.] When they find a prey, they devour it at once, and stay not to gnaw upon the bones, but swallow them down hastily. Bp. Hall. Our translation of this passage is ambiguous: but probably it was intended to express, that those wolves were not employed so long as till the morrow in gnawing the bones, for that before that time they had devoured the prey, flesh, skin, bones, and all, as wolves commonly do. Parkhurst.

5. — every morning] The expression "every morning" alludes to the custom of administering justice in the morning: see Ps. ci. 8; Jer. xxi. 12. W. Lowth.

6, 7. I have cut off the nations: &c.] I have given the Jews sufficient warning by those judgments, which I have brought upon the neighbouring nations. I said of thee, O Jerusalem, Surely thou wilt be premonished by My judgments to fear Me, &c. Bp. Hall.

God is introduced speaking after the manner of men, and expecting what effect such proceedings might in reason have produced. Compare Isai. v. 4; Jer. viii. 6. W. Lowth. God had caused the Jews to see the destruction of several nations, and especially of their brethren the Israelites, that they might learn by these examples to fear Him: but because they had persevered in their rebellion, the fire of His wrath was going to consume them. Those, who see the examples of Divine justice, and the miseries which befall others, and do not improve by them, aggravate their guilt and punishment, and have reason to expect the severest effects of the Divine vengeance. Ostervald.

8. — for my determination is to gather the nations, &c.] This may perhaps be meant of the same general summons, of which Joel speaks, when the nations shall be gathered "into the valley of Jehoshaphat:" see Joel iii. 2, 12; and the notes there. W. Lowth.

9. For then will I turn to the people a pure language, &c.] "Then" used largely for afterwards. Abp. Newcome. After which I will restore peace to My people; and will so work with them, that, abandoning all false worship and idolatry, they shall, with pure hearts and lips, confess Me the Lord Christ. Bp. Hall. This is a blessing reserved for the latter ages, after the conversion of the Jews, and the coming in of the fulness of the Gentiles, when "there shall be one Lord, and His name one," Zech. xiv. 9. W. Lowth.

10. From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia &c.] The Jews, who are dispersed into the most distant countries, such as was Ethiopia, which lay beyond Egypt, shall come into the Christian Church, and there make their religious acknowledgments. W. Lowth. See the note on Isai. xviii. 1. Abp. Newcome.

"The daughter of My dispersed" is the same with My dispersed; as "the daughter of Zion" is equivalent to Zion: see the note on Jer. iv. 31. W. Lowth.

11. In that day shalt thou not be ashamed &c.] In that day thou shalt have no cause to be ashamed of all thy former offences, wherein thou hast transgressed against Me; since I have both fully forgiven them, and reformed them also; for then I will take away from thee that vain pride and confidence, which too many of My people put in the holiness of mount Zion, and the temple there; as if that alone could secure them from all evils, and procure all blessings. Bp. Hall. See the note on Isai. iv. 2.

12. I will also leave in the midst of thee &c.] Rather, In the stead of these proud boasters, I will leave in the midst of thee those meek and humble souls, which shall be vile in their own eyes, and shall place all their trust in Christ their Saviour. Bp. Hall. The blessings of the Gospel are peculiarly promised to the poor: see Isai. xi. 4; xiv. 32; lxi. 1; Zech. xi. 11. Christ and His Apostles apply these promises to those that were converted by their preaching, Matt. v. 3; xi. 5; 1 Cor. i. 26, 27; Jam. ii. 5: which texts are meant of such as are endued with a true spirit of poverty, such as consists in a lowliness of mind, contempt of the world, and a resigned will. Afflictions are very useful to produce such a temper of mind, and therefore are often the lot of true disciples: see Acts xiv. 22; Heb. xii. 7; 1 Pet. i. 7. By "afflicted" may be meant those that "come out of great tribulation." W. Lowth.

13. — they shall feed and lie down, &c.] The great Shepherd, the Messiah, shall both feed and protect them: compare Ezek. xxxiv. 28; Mic. iv. 4; v. 4; vii. 14. W. Lowth.

14. Sing, O daughter of Zion; &c.] These hymns of joy properly belong to the times of the Gospel, and especially to the triumphant state of the Church yet to come. Compare Isai. xii. 6; liv. 1; Zech. ii. 10; ix. 9. W. Lowth, Dr. Wells.

18. I will gather them that are sorrowful &c.] I will gather and comfort them that mourn after the solemn assemblies of Zion; grieving at their withholding therefrom by their forced captivity: who are a feeling part of thee, My Church; to whom the reproach of their long restraint was a burden. Bp. Hall. The humiliation and affliction of the Jews have furnished matter of reproach to their enemies. Abp. Newcome.

19. — I will save her that halteth, &c.] See the note on the passage in the margin.

The promises, which Zephaniah adds to his former threatenings, teach us, that, as God afflicts men only to chastise and purify them, He removes their afflictions when they return to Him. Ostervald.

HAGGAI.

INTRODUCTION.

HAGGAI is generally reputed to have been born in the captivity, and to have returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel, Ezra ii. 2. He is reckoned as the tenth in order among the Prophets, both in the Hebrew and Greek copies; and may be considered as the first of the three Prophets who flourished among the Jews after their return to their country. He appears to have been raised up by God to exhort Zerubbabel, Ezra v. 1, and Joshua the high priest, the son of Josedech, to resume the work of the temple; which had been interrupted near fourteen years, in consequence of the intrigues of the Samaritans, and other obstructions excited to defeat the edict of Cyrus, Ezra iv. 24. He began to prophesy in the second year of Darius Hystaspes, in the year of the world 3484, about fifteen years after the foundation of the temple had been laid, Ezra v. 1. The Prophets, after the captivity, sometimes reckon by the dates of those sovereigns to whom their country was subjected.

The style of Haggai is represented by the learned Bp. Lowth as entirely prosaick; but Abp. Newcome has given a translation of it on the supposition, that a great part of it admits of a metrical division.

Haggai was probably of the sacerdotal race; and Epiphanius relates, that he was buried among the priests at Jerusalem. Dr. Gray.

CHAP. I.

Before CHRIST about 520.

1 Haggai reproveth the people for neglecting the building of the house. 7 He inciteth them to the building. 12 He promiseth God's assistance to them being forward.

IN the second year of Darius the king, in the sixth month, in the first day of the month, came the word of the LORD † by Haggai the prophet unto Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, ‖ governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, saying, † Heb. by the hand of Haggai.

‖ Or, captain.

2 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the LORD's house should be built.

3 Then came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

4 Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your cieled houses, and this house lie waste?

5 Now therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts; † Consider your ways.

Before CHRIST about 520.

6 Ye have [a] sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag † with holes.

† Heb. Set your heart on your ways.
[a] Deut. 28. 38. Mic. 6. 14, 15.
† Heb. pierced through.

7 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Consider your ways.

8 Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the LORD.

9 Ye looked for much, and, lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did ‖ blow upon it. Why? saith the LORD of hosts. Because of mine house that is waste, and ye run every man unto his own house.

‖ Or, blow it away.

Chap. I. ver. 2. — This people say, The time is not come, &c.] This prophecy seems to have been delivered before Darius had granted his decree for rebuilding the temple. Compare Ezra v. 1, with vi. 1. W. Lowth.

4. Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your cieled houses, and this house lie waste?] You have found means and opportunity to build fine houses for yourselves, though ye are content to let the house of God lie in ruins. It argues a great contempt of God and religion, when men think no cost or finery too much to bestow upon themselves, and the meanest accommodation good enough for the service of God. W. Lowth.

5, 6. — Consider your ways. Ye have sown much, &c.] Consider well the courses that ye take, and the success of your affairs. God hath justly crossed you in all your hopes and endeavours. "Ye have sown much," expecting a goodly crop, but ye find little to reap, &c.; and he, that earneth wages, is never the better, never the richer; his gains do not prosper in his hands. Bp. Hall.

He, that earns wages, is forced presently to lay out all he earns to supply his wants; so that his money only passes through his hands, and stays not with him to enrich him; just as if he put it into a bag with holes, through which it ran out as fast as he put it in. Dr. Wells.

8. Go up to the mountain,] The Jews had a grant from Cyrus, of cedar trees from the mountain of Lebanon, for the building of the temple. See Ezra iii. 7; vi. 3, 4. Parkhurst.

9. — I did blow upon it.] I crossed your hopes and designs in it. Bp. Hall. Or, I had blown upon it; I had blasted the fruits of the earth, while they were in the field, so that most of all that little crop came to nothing. W. Lowth, Dr. Wells.

Before CHRIST about 520.

10 Therefore [b] the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit.

[b] Deut. 28. 23.

11 And I called for a drought upon the land, and upon the mountains, and upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil, and upon that which the ground bringeth forth, and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labour of the hands.

12 ¶ Then Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the LORD their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the LORD their God had sent him, and the people did fear before the LORD.

13 Then spake Haggai the LORD's messenger in the LORD's message unto the people, saying, I am with you, saith the LORD.

14 And the LORD stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and the spirit of all the remnant of the people; and they came and did work in the house of the LORD of hosts, their God, 15 In the four and twentieth day of the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the king.

CHAP. II.

1 He encourageth the people to the work, by promise of greater glory to the second temple than was in the first. 10 In the type of holy things and unclean he sheweth their sins hindered the work. 20 God's promise to Zerubbabel.

Before CHRIST about 520.

IN the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the LORD † by the prophet Haggai, saying, † Heb. by the hand of.

2 Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and to the residue of the people, saying,

3 Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do ye see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing?

4 Yet now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the LORD; and be strong, O Joshua, son of Josedech, the high priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the LORD, and work: for I am with you, saith the LORD of hosts:

5 According to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so my spirit remaineth among you: fear ye not.

6 For thus saith the LORD of hosts; [a] Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land;

[a] Hebr. 12. 26.

7 And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come: and I will

12. Then Zerubbabel &c.] Compare Ezra v. 2.

Chap. II. ver. 3. Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory?] When the foundation of the house was laid in the second year of Cyrus, many of the ancient men, that had seen the first house, wept to see how much the second temple would fall short of the glory of the first, Ezra iii. 12. The second year of Cyrus was fifty-three years after the destruction of the first temple, so the oldest men among those that returned home might very well remember how glorious that was. This prophecy was uttered fifteen years after the foundations of the second temple were laid; so there might some still survive that saw the first. W. Lowth.

5. According to the word that I covenanted with you] I will fulfil those promises which I made with you, when I delivered you out of Egypt, that upon your obedience I would not "leave you nor forsake you," but guide and prosper you in all your undertakings: see Nehem. ix. 20; Isai. lxiii. 11. W. Lowth.

6. For thus saith the Lord of hosts;] The occasion of this prophecy was the dejection of the Jews at the unhopeful appearance of their new temple: the comfort in the Prophet's message was suited to this circumstance, and contains a promise of some glory to be conferred on this temple to make it exceed the glory of the former. Bp. Chandler.

That it is some very great thing, which is here foretold and promised for the honour of this second temple, no man can doubt, who considers in what a solemn manner it is here expressed: this great and glorious title, "the LORD of hosts," being no less than five several times used within the compass of these four verses; the like instance to which is not perhaps in the whole Bible. So that, by the solemn manner of expressing it, we may imagine that it is some very great thing which is spoken of, and such as the like had never been before: and such was the incarnation and coming of the Messiah. Abp. Tillotson.

—— Yet once, it is a little while,] Or, "once more," as the Seventy render it, whom St. Paul follows, Heb. xii. 26. The phrase implies such an alteration as shall not give way to any farther change, as the Apostle there expounds it. The space of time from this prophecy to the coming of the Messiah may be called "a little while," in comparison of the several ages expired since the first promise of a Redeemer. W. Lowth.

—— I will shake the heavens, &c.] Once I did in great terrour deliver My law; and now, ere any long time, I will once more work a great change in My Church, by the bringing in of My Gospel; before and in the exhibiting of which, as I did formerly in the delivery of the Law, I will do wondrous things, &c. Bp. Hall.

The Hebrews have no one word, whereby to express the world, and therefore they do it by an enumeration of the principal parts of it. See Gen. i. 1; 2 Pet. iii. 13. So the Prophet here, to express the great commotions and changes, that should be in the world before the coming of the Messiah, says, that God "will shake the heavens," &c.; that is, He would cause great revolutions in the world; there should be great wars and confusions, and the empires of the world should pass from one hand to another. Abp. Tillotson.

Great commotions and changes in the world are expressed by shaking the heavens and the earth; see Ezek. xxvi. 15; xxxviii. 19; Joel iii. 16. These expressions may denote here the great commotions that should be in the Roman empire, from the death of Julius Cesar, till near the birth of Christ: or it may in general signify the introduction of such a kingdom or religion, as that of which the Messiah was to be the head; which shall in the end break in pieces and destroy all the other dominions of the world. W. Lowth.

10 ¶ In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

11 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying,

12 If one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? and the priests answered and said, No.

13 Then said Haggai, If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.

Before CHRIST about 520.

14 Then answered Haggai, and said, So is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the LORD; and so is every work of their hands; and that which they offer there is unclean.

15 And now, I pray you, consider from this day and upward, from before a stone was laid upon a stone in the temple of the LORD:

16 Since those days were, when one came to an heap of twenty measures, there were but ten: when one came to the pressfat for to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty.

17 I smote you [b] with blasting and with mildew and with hail in all the labours of your hands; yet ye turned not to me, saith the LORD.

18 Consider now from this day and upward, from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, even from the day that the foundation of the LORD's temple was laid, consider it.

19 Is the seed yet in the barn? yea, as is "the desire of all nations," as the Redeemer of the world, and the guide and director to mankind in the performance of their duty, shall come under the roof of this house: and though it wants the cloud of glory overshadowing the mercy seat, which was a symbol of the Divine presence peculiar to Solomon's temple, (see Ps. lxxx. 1,) yet I will honour this second temple with a much greater glory, even the presence of the Messiah, in whom shall "dwell all the fulness of the Godhead bodily," Col. ii. 9. Bp. Hall, Dr. Wells, W. Lowth.

The expectation, the hope, the desire of all nations, and of Israel in particular, was a known description of some Person, delivered from Abraham's days, Gen. xxii. 18, from one Prophet to another, and, after the captivity, fixed on the Messiah, of whom the Jews, about Christ's time, interpreted this text in Haggai: and in his time the Messiah was usually termed, "the hope," "the blessed hope," "the hope of Israel," "the hope of the promise to the twelve tribes," "the blessing of Abraham to the Gentiles," 1 Tim. i. 1; Titus ii. 13; Acts xxviii. 20; xxvi. 7, 8; Gal. iii. 14. Bp. Chandler.

As Christ ought to be, what He is called, "the desire of all nations" in general, so ought He to be the desire of every person in particular. We must all, and every one of us, desire to have Him for our only Saviour and Redeemer, our only Mediator and Advocate: we must desire to have Him, according to all the offices which He has undertaken for us, as our Prophet, our King, and our Priest: our Prophet, to reveal His and our Father's will unto us and in us; our King, to rule and govern our hearts and affections, to keep both our souls and bodies in subjection; and our Priest, to make atonement for our sins, and so to reconcile God to us and us to Him. Bp. Beveridge.

8, 9. The silver is mine, &c.] Think not that I stand upon matter of cost or price of metals: all the silver and gold, which is hidden in the bowels of the earth, is Mine, and how easy were it for Me thus to adorn My house! But the glory of this house doth not consist in these outward things: no; the glory of this latter house, though meaner in structure, shall be greater than that of the former, saith the Lord: in that My Son, the Saviour of the world, being clothed in flesh, shall come personally and visibly under its roof; there He, who is "the Prince of Peace," shall make His appearance; and there shall His Gospel, which is the Gospel of peace, be preached and published to the world. See Isai. ix. 6; Mic. v. 5; Eph. ii. 14. Bp. Hall, W. Lowth.

God wanted not the command of gold and silver, to have made the second temple equal to Solomon's in outward glory and splendour; He could easily have made it so in that respect; for "silver and gold are His," and all the riches of the world are at His command: but He chose to put a far greater honour upon it than that of silver and gold, and to make it much more glorious in another respect: "the glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former; (because) in this place I will give (the Messiah, the) peace," and happiness, and salvation of mankind, and incomparably the greatest blessing that ever was given to the world. Abp. Tillotson.

12—14. If one bear holy flesh &c.] In like manner as "holy flesh," or any part of a sacrifice, will not make any thing else, which it touches, to become holy; so neither have the sacrifices of this people, which have been all along offered since their leaving off the work of My temple, made them holy or acceptable unto God. But on the contrary, as the touch of an unclean person renders what he touches unclean also, so the very sacrifices of this people, since they have left off the building of My temple, are become unclean or unacceptable to Me, by reason of that uncleanness or impurity of their minds, which has caused their neglect of My house. Dr. Wells.

15. — consider from this day and upward, from before a stone was laid &c.] From the time that a stop had been put to the building of the temple, after the first foundations of it were laid: compare Ezra vi. 3. W. Lowth. "Upward" should be "forward:" so the word is used in 1 Sam. xvi. 13, and xxx. 25; in both those places it means from such a time and afterwards. Abp. Secker.

16. — an heap of twenty measures,] That is, an heap of corn, which seemed likely to produce twenty measures; but which failed from the poverty of the ear. Abp. Newcome.

18. Consider now from this day and upward, &c.] Rather, "forward." In the fifteenth verse the Prophet exhorted them to reflect upon the calamities they had suffered from the time the building of the temple was left off. Now he bids them look forward from the day the building was renewed, and they would find a visible change in their affairs for the better. W. Lowth.

—— from the day that the foundation of the Lord's temple was laid,] The Prophet speaks of the carrying on of the building, as if it were a new foundation, because the work had been so long interrupted: compare Zech. viii. 9. W. Lowth.

19. Is the seed yet in the barn? &c.] Is the harvest already laid up in the barn? Or are any fruits of the earth gathered in? No, certainly; this is but the ninth month, (answering in part to our

21 Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, saying, I will shake the heavens and the earth;

22 And I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother.

November,) when no judgment can be made what will be the increase of the year following. Yet from this time I promise you the blessing of a fruitful year, as an encouragement to you to carry on the building. Compare Zech. viii. 12. W. Lowth.

21. — Zerubbabel, governor of Judah,] By the same title which is given him, chap. i. 1; as "governor of Judah," he was a type of the Messiah, to whom the following words belong. W. Lowth.

23. In that day, — will I take thee, O Zerubbabel, &c.] I will invest Thee with My power and authority, as the head of My Church, and judge of the world. So kings depute their viceroys by giving them their signet, Gen. xli. 42; which was particularly the custom of the Persian monarchs: see Esth. iii. 10; viii. 2: or the expression may denote one particularly near and dear to God, and always under His eye and protection; compare Jer. xxii. 24; Cant. viii. 6.

This prophecy could not be fulfilled in Zerubbabel, who did not in all likelihood live many years after the finishing of the temple, and certainly did not see the great changes here foretold: therefore the Messiah must be here described under the name of Zerubbabel, as He elsewhere is under that of David. W. Lowth.

The proper application to be made of the prophecies concerning the Messiah, especially of the celebrated one in the early part of this chapter, is the very same with that which the Apostle makes, from the consideration of the perfection and excellence of this revelation, which God hath made to the world by His Son: "See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh," &c. Heb. xii. 25—28. We have all the advantages of the Divine revelation which the world ever had; and the last and most perfect that the world ever shall have: we have not only Moses and the Prophets, but that doctrine, which the Son of God came down from heaven on purpose to declare to the world. God hath vouchsafed to us that clear and complete revelation of His will, which He denied to "many Prophets and kings, who desired to see those things which we see, but could not see them; and to hear those things which we hear, but could not hear them." There were good men in the world under those imperfect revelations, which God made to them: but we have far greater advantages, and more powerful arguments to be good than ever they had. And, as we ought thankfully to acknowledge these blessed advantages, so ought we likewise with the greatest care and diligence to improve them. Abp. Tillotson.

ZECHARIAH.

INTRODUCTION.

ZECHARIAH was one of the last in that succession of Prophets, whom God sent at sundry times with notifications of His will to mankind under the Jewish dispensation. That he was of the number of the captivity that returned from Babylon to Jerusalem in consequence of the decree of Cyrus is unquestionable; but that he was very young when he came there, appears from this, that sixteen or seventeen years afterwards, when he had begun to exercise his prophetical function, he is styled "a young man," chap. ii. 4. In his first chapter he twice styles himself Zechariah the son of Berechiah the son of Iddo; but Ezra v. 1; vi. 14, he is called simply the son of Iddo; which may be accounted for on the supposition that his father Berechiah died before his grandfather Iddo, perhaps before the return from Babylon; consequently out of the family Zechariah came to be better known and distinguished as the son of his surviving, though remote parent, in whose house he lived, and to whose inheritance he was next in succession. It was in the eighth month of the second year of the reign of Darius the son of Hystaspes, king of Persia, that is, about the year 520 before the Christian era, that he first opened his Divine commission with a serious and solemn call to repentance. In the same year he is found, together with the Prophet Haggai, employed in assisting the endeavours of Zerubbabel and Jeshua to excite and animate the people at Jerusalem to a vigorous prosecution of the work of rebuilding their temple. For this purpose he communicated the visions which are contained in the six first chapters, and which he was favoured with on the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month in the year aforesaid; all evidently calculated to inspire the strongest hopes and assurance of future prosperity through the returning favour of the Almighty; and thus to convince the people, that they were not labouring on a barren and ungrateful soil. The same design is further carried on in a subsequent revelation made to him about two years afterwards, which is the subject of chap. vii, viii.

Thus far with regard to the former part of these prophecies, the time and occasion are ascertained by the dates annexed to them, from whence the general scope of them is easily deducible. But with respect to those that follow, we are left more in the way of conjecture. It is however highly probable, from the apparent difference both of style and subject, that they came forth at a different and more advanced period of our Prophet's life. It is not at all surprising, if this writer, as he advanced in years and dignity, should have learned to express himself in a tone of more elevation and energy. At such distant periods also, as we suppose, the subject of course would be materially changed. For he would no longer have occasion to stimulate his countrymen to the building of the temple, which was already completely finished; but he was actually engaged in predicting some remarkable occurrences, that would distinguish his own and the neighbouring nations in remote periods, some of them perhaps not yet arrived; and in urging an immediate reformation of national manners. In so doing, what more natural to expect, than that he would encounter hatred and opposition from those, whose corruptions he was called upon to censure and repress? Accordingly there is sufficient ground to conclude, that all this happened to him, from what he says in the eleventh chapter, of the freedom and zeal with which he exposed and counteracted the iniquitous conduct of those who made merchandise of the flock; meaning those unprincipled guides, who assumed the direction of the people for no better purpose than to sacrifice them to the gratification of their own ambition and avarice. Several of these, by exhibiting in himself the contrast of a good shepherd, he found means at first to deprive, at least of that influence and authority which they once possessed, and had wickedly abused. The sequel may easily be conjectured; for from similar causes similar effects may naturally be expected. His enraged adversaries, after thwarting and defeating all his endeavours for the publick good, at length, no doubt by intrigue and misrepresentation, so far succeeded, as to turn the tide of popular prejudice and resentment against him; and he was barbarously murdered, as his namesake Zechariah the son of Jehoiada had been for the same cause, and in the selfsame place, between three and four hundred years before. For this we have no less authority than that of our blessed Lord Himself, who expressly calls the person of whom He speaks, Matt. xxiii. 35, "Zacharias son of Barachias," distinguishing him from the beforementioned Zechariah son of Jehoiada by his patronymick as effectually, as two men, bearing the same Christian name in our days, would be distinguished by their family names. Both were priests as well as Prophets, and therefore that both should suffer nearly on the same spot, will appear less surprising, when we recollect, that the space between the porch and the altar was the court of the priests, appropriated to them for the publick exercise of their sacred ministry. Dr. Blayney.

Zechariah, who certainly collected his own prophecies into their present form, chap. i. 9; ii. 2, is mentioned as a Prophet by Ezra, chap. v. 1; vi. 14; and is cited as an inspired writer by the sacred penmen of the New Testament, Matt. xxi. 4, 5; xxvi. 31; xxvii. 9; Mark xiv. 27; John xii. 15; xix. 37; Ephes. iv. 25; Rev. i. 7. The minute accomplishment of his own illustrious prophecies bears a signal testimony to the truth of that infallible Spirit by which he was inspired. He was so distinguished for the peculiar excellency of his predictions, as to be styled the Sun among the lesser Prophets. It is, however, the sun, sometimes clouded by obscurity. Dr. Gray.

That he is in some degree obscure and hard to be understood, is not to be questioned. And which of the ancient Prophets is not so? It is of the nature of prophecy to affect a degree of abstruseness before the accomplishment, in order not to clash with the freedom of human agency. And there is no doubt, that some of Zechariah's predictions relate to matters that are still involved in futurity. No wonder then that these fall not within the reach of our comprehension. Others there are, which we have good reason to believe have already been fulfilled, but which do not appear with such a degree of evidence, as they probably would have done if we had been better informed concerning the times and facts to which they relate. With respect to the emblems and types that are exhibited, they are most of them of easy and determinate application. And in favour of the importance of his subject matter it must be acknowledged, that, next to Isaiah, Zechariah is the most evangelical of all the Prophets, having more frequent and more clear and direct allusions to the character and coming of the Messiah and His kingdom, than any of the rest. Upon the whole, we shall find the diction remarkably pure, the construction natural and perspicuous, and the style judiciously varied according to the nature of the subject; simple and plain in the narrative and historical parts; but in those that are wholly prophetical, the latter chapters in particular, rising to a degree of elevation and grandeur, scarcely inferiour to the sublimest of the inspired writings. Dr. Blayney.

The style of Zechariah is so remarkably similar to that of Jeremiah, that the Jews were accustomed to observe, that the spirit of Jeremiah had passed into him. He is generally prosaick till towards the conclusion of his work, when he becomes more elevated and poetical. The whole work is beautifully connected by easy transitions, and present and future scenes are blended with the most delicate contexture. Dr. Gray.

Chap. I. The six first verses of this chapter contain a separate and distinct revelation, but at the same time connected with the general purport of the following visions, to which it forms a suitable introduction. The Jews were dispirited with the recollection of their past sufferings, and a sense of their present weak and dependent state. The Divine wisdom thought meet to rally their courage, and animate them to the undertaking of what was necessary for the restoration of their affairs, and particularly to a vigorous prosecution of the building of the temple already in hand, by holding forth to them a prospect of better times. Accordingly they are assured, that God was now ready to restore them to favour, and accumulate His blessings upon them, provided they would turn to Him, and not provoke His judgments, as their fathers had done, by wilful disobedience. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. In the eighth month,] Corresponding with the latter part of October, and the beginning of November. The work in the house of God had been already resumed this same year, on the twenty-fourth day of the sixth month, that is, the beginning of September, in pursuance of a Divine message delivered by the Prophet Haggai, Hag. i. 14, 15. Dr. Blayney.

5, 6. Your fathers, where are they? &c.] The purport of these verses is this: Both your fathers, and the Prophets who prophesied unto them, are no more; but though the parties themselves are dead, I appeal to you who are living and well know, that the things, which the Prophets were commissioned to deliver to your fathers in My name, did actually come upon them; and that your fathers themselves, though they would not at first believe and regard, were at last convinced, and acknowledged that God had dealt with them exactly according to His declared purpose. Dr. Blayney.

"Take hold," in the margin "overtake;" as an enemy does one whom he pursues. Abp. Newcome.

7. Upon the four and twentieth day &c.] The second revelation made to Zechariah, about three months after the first, contains eight distinct visions following each other in the same night.

The first vision is of an angel in a human form, sitting on horseback in a low valley among myrtle trees, attended by others upon horses of different colours. The Prophet asks the meaning, and is informed that they were the ministers of Providence, sent to examine into the state of the whole earth, which they report to be quiet and tranquil. The angel hereupon intercedes for Judah and Jerusalem, which he represents to have suffered under the Divine indignation seventy years. He receives a consolatory answer. The Prophet is directed to proclaim, that God's wrath against Judah was at an end; that He would cause the temple and Jerusalem to be rebuilt; and would fill the country with good, as a token and consequence of His renewed favour, ver. 7—17. Dr. Blayney.

—— the month Sebat,] A Chaldee or a Syriack name. It corresponds with the latter end of January and the beginning of February. Abp. Newcome, Dr. Blayney.

8. I saw by night, and behold a man &c.] A "red horse" is an emblem of war and bloodshed: see Rev. vi. 4. The "Man" or "Angel," ver. 11, denotes the Logos, or Son of God, appearing as the "Captain of God's hosts," or armies: see Josh. v. 13, 14; and the notes on verses 12, 13, 20. W. Lowth.

—— behind him were there red horses,] With riders, who were angels, ver. 11. They had horses to shew their power and celerity; and horses of different colours, to intimate the difference of their ministries. Abp. Newcome, Dr. Blayney.

9. — the angel that talked with me] Distinct from those represented, ver. 8: he who talked with the Prophet, ver. 13. Abp. Newcome. This was another heavenly minister, sent probably to present the visions to the Prophet's imagination, as well as to explain them. Vitringa styles him, The accompanying and interpreting angel. Dr. Blayney.

10. And the man that stood among the myrtle trees answered and said, &c.] And the great Angel of the covenant, Christ Jesus, who stood among the myrtle trees, as taking the answer out of the mouth of that angel who spake to me, answered and said, These are ministering spirits, &c. Bp. Hall.

11. And they answered the angel of the Lord that stood among the myrtle trees,] They answer Him, as their superiour and commander. He is distinguished from the other "angel of the Lord," ver. 12, by the circumstance of His "standing among the myrtle trees." W. Lowth.

12. Then the angel of the Lord answered and said, O Lord of hosts, &c.] The angel, mentioned ver. 9, makes his supplication to the superiour Angel, ver. 8, 10, who was indeed the Logos, or Son of God, being called by the name of Jehovah here, and ver. 13, 20. Compare chap. iii. 1, 2; xii. 8, 10. W. Lowth.

16.—a line] That is, the architect's measuring line for laying out the building. See chap. ii. 1; Jer. xxxi. 39. Dr. Blayney.

17.—My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad;] God having determined once more to adopt the cities of Judah for His own, very aptly calls them "My cities." The prosperity of the Jews under Simon and others of the Asmonean family completely answers to this prediction. Dr. Blayney.

18. Then lifted I up mine eyes, &c.] In this second vision under the emblem of four horns is represented, that God, by such agents as He would appoint, would quell and bring down all those powers, which had risen, or should rise, to oppress His people. Horns are an usual emblem of strength and power; and because those fierce beasts, that have them, push and gore with them, and, tossing them furiously about, scatter and drive all before them, they aptly denote conquering and oppressive princes and states. See Dan. vii, viii. Dr. Blayney. The number "four" may denote that the Jews had many enemies, enemies on every side; from all the four coasts of heaven. Abp. Newcome, Bp. Hall.

20.—four carpenters.] Or smiths, according to the number of the horns. W. Lowth. To denote such as should "come to fray them," or frighten away the beasts with the horns, and to "cast out" or break to pieces "the horns of the Gentiles;" that is, to take away their power, to cause them to cease from disturbing the Jews any more in the building of the temple; (Dr. Wells;) and to repair the mischief which the horns had made. Bp. Hall, W. Lowth.

Chap. II. This chapter contains the substance of a third vision. In conformity to what was said, chap. i. 16, "a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem," a man, or an angel, appears with a measuring line in his hand, going, as he says, to take the dimensions of Jerusalem, in order to its being rebuilt according to its former extent; which was afterwards done by Nehemiah. This is accompanied with a message delivered to the Prophet, shewing the great increase of her population and wealth; her perfect security under the Divine protection; recall of her exiles from the north country, and the punishment of those that had oppressed them; the return of God's presence to dwell in her; and the conversion of many heathen nations; and lastly, the reinstatement of Judah and Jerusalem in the full possession of all their ancient privileges. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1.—a man] An angel in human appearance; see ver. 3. W. Lowth.

3.—the angel that talked with me] See chap. i. 9. "Another angel," in the following clause, should be rather "the other angel;" that is, the angel "with the measuring line in his hand." W. Lowth.

4.—speak to this young man,] Zechariah was probably at this time between twenty and thirty years of age. Dr. Blayney.

[b] Isai. 12. 6. & 54. 1.

[c] Lev. 26. 12. Ezek. 37. 27. 2 Cor. 6. 16.

—— Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls &c.] The inhabitants of Jerusalem will multiply so fast, that the houses within the walls will not be able to contain them, and their cattle will increase in proportion: see Jer. xxxi. 27. Under the captivity the land was made a desolation "without man and without beast," Jer. xxxiii. 12; now the contrary blessing is promised. W. Lowth.

That the prophecy was literally fulfilled, we learn from the words of Josephus: "For the city overflowing with multitudes by degrees crept beyond the walls, and joining the northern parts of the temple to the hill, they advanced no small way, so that the fourth hill, called Bezetha, was surrounded with buildings." Dr. Blayney.

5. For I, — will be unto her a wall of fire &c.] This image strongly expresses the protection of the Deity. It must have reminded the Jews of the pillar of fire, by which God directed and defended their ancestors. The promise that the Lord "will be the glory in the midst of her," is an allusion to the symbol of the Divine presence in the Holy of Holies, Rom. ix. 4. Vitringa refers the literal completion of this prophecy to the time of the Maccabees; but thinks that the protection and glory of the future Jerusalem may also be predicted, Rev. xx. 9. Abp. Newcome.

This promise will receive its utmost completion in that "New Jerusalem," described Rev. xxi. 10, where "the glory of God and the Lamb" are said to be "the light thereof," ver. 11, 23. Compare Isai. lx. 19. W. Lowth.

6. Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, &c.] This beautiful apostrophe is addressed to such of the Jews as continued still to dwell in Babylon, and the adjacent country, lying north of Jerusalem, exhorting them not only to come, but to make their escape with all possible speed from a land, which God was about to make the scene of His vengeance. Dr. Blayney.

8. For thus saith the Lord of hosts;] That is, the Messiah. There is no part of Holy Scripture that more fully vindicates those confessions of our faith, which call upon us to acknowledge a plurality of Persons in the Godhead, than the very remarkable passage in this and the three next verses. On the present verse St. Jerome remarks, "The voice of the Saviour speaking is introduced, who, the Almighty God, says that He is sent by the Almighty Father." And again, citing the tenth and eleventh verses, he thus explains them, "These things saith the Lord sent by the Lord whose name is Almighty." The comment of Theodoret also is not less full and pointed: "The Prophet has given us to understand, not only that there are two Persons, but also two Persons of the same rank: 'For thus saith the Lord of hosts, After the glory hath He sent Me;' and, to shew who the Person sending is, He subjoins, 'And ye shall know that the Lord of hosts hath sent Me:' therefore both the Person sending is the Lord of hosts, and the Person sent is the Lord of hosts, and there is no difference of dignity between them." This explanation rests on the concurrent support of all the distinguished theologians of antiquity, whose opinion on the subject can at present be ascertained. Dr. Eveleigh.

—— After the glory hath he sent me unto the nations &c.] To send a person after any thing implies the requisition of his services for that particular purpose. When therefore God is said to have sent His Angel "after the glory," He must be understood to have charged Him with the means of bringing it about. Now the mean which the Divine wisdom had devised for securing to His people "the glory" He had promised them, was by executing a severe vengeance on their oppressors, to manifest His concern for their honour and interest, and His resolution not to suffer their wrongs to pass off with impunity. In pursuance of this plan, and of the orders he had received, the Angel says, he was about to "shake" his hand over the Babylonians, by whom the Jews had lately been oppressed, and to deliver them over as "a spoil to their (former) servants." And as this is given as a reason for summoning the Jews to quit that devoted country with all possible speed, that they might not be involved in the calamities which were coming upon it; so the Angel subjoins, that when this came to pass according to His word, it would be a convincing proof that Jehovah had sent Him. Dr. Blayney.

—— he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye.] The highest expressions that language, assisted with all its helps of metaphor and resemblance, can afford, are very languid and faint, in comparison of what they strain to represent, when the goodness of God toward them, who love Him, comes to be expressed. See Ps. xxxvi. 6; ciii. 11, 13. So David strives to utter it, but with similitudes far short of the truth. If any will come near to reach it, it is that in Moses and Zechariah, where they who love God are compared to "the apple of God's eye;" that is, to the most dear and tender part, as it were, about Him. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

9. For, behold, I will shake mine hand upon them, &c.] This is the hand of Jehovah Himself, and of the Lord of hosts Himself, which is said, in one passage of Isaiah, to be "shaken over the river," Isai. xi. 15; and in another, "over Egypt," Isai. xix. 16: and no where else, except in the text, is the same form of expression used in holy writ. Dr. Eveleigh.

—— they shall be a spoil to their servants:] As the Babylonians became to the Medes and Persians, who had been subdued, and reduced to subjection, by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon. Abp. Newcome, Dr. Blayney.

11. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord &c.] Without excluding an allusion in these words to the coming in of the Gentiles to the Christian Church, the spiritual Zion; this prediction would be verified in earlier times, not only by the conversion of the Edomites in the time of John Hyrcanus, but by many other proselytes to Judaism from the heathen nations. Such were the religious proselytes spoken of, as no inconsiderable number, in the Acts of the Apostles, chap. ii. 10; xiii. 43: Nicolas of Antioch, the deacon, chap. vi. 5; the treasurer of Candace, queen of Ethiopia, chap. viii. 27; Cornelius the centurion, chap. x. 1; and such also perhaps were those Greeks mentioned John xii. 20. Dr. Blayney.

—— the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee.] It being here said, that Jehovah, being sent by Jehovah, should come and dwell in the Church, enlarged by the accession of the Gentiles, who can that be but our Lord Christ, who dwelt among us, and was by God His Father sent unto us? Dr. Isaac Barrow. A passage, which like this declares, that "the Lord of hosts" was sent by One who also Himself is "the Lord of hosts," ought not for a moment to excite astonishment in a Christian; knowing, as he must, that the second Person in the Trinity, who is so often said to "have been sent by the Father," is called in the New Testament, not only "God," but also by a name which is allowed to be equivalent to "the Lord of hosts;" namely, "the Almighty." See John i. 1; Rom. ix. 5; Rev. i. 8. Dr. Eveleigh.

Intimations of a plurality of Persons in the Godhead seem to have been given to the Jews, as in other places of Scripture, so in those texts, where mention is made of God more than once in the same text and under different capacities: as "the Lord raining fire upon Sodom from the Lord," Gen. xix. 24; God anointing, and God anointed, Ps. xlv. 6, 7; "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at My right hand," Ps. cx. 1; "the Lord sending and the Lord sent," in this passage; with sundry others of the like nature. Those of the last form are the more considerable, because the learned Jews have acknowledged, that, though the other names of God may be and are sometimes allowed to creatures, because derived from His works, or such excellences as are communicable, yet the name of "Jehovah" or "the Lord" is peculiar to God alone, because this denotes His eternal and necessary existence. Dean Stanhope.

13. Be silent, O all flesh, &c.] Let all men be "silent" in token of the profoundest reverence and submission, (see Hab. ii. 20,) when God comes down from heaven, (compare Mic. i. 3,) or gives visible signs of His appearance to execute judgment upon His adversaries, or to shew mercy upon His servants. Heaven is called "the habitation of God's holiness," Deut. xxvi. 15; Isai. lxiii. 15. W. Lowth.

Chap. III. Vision the fourth. Zechariah sees Joshua the high priest standing before the Angel of the Lord, as it were soliciting to be admitted to the discharge of his sacred functions, and Satan, or the adversary, standing by in the act of opposing him. The adversary receives a rebuke from Jehovah, by whose special command Joshua is stripped of his filthy garments, and invested with the priestly robes of service, and a clean "mitre" or bonnet set upon his head. The Angel delivers him a solemn charge. After this follows a clear and interesting prediction of the coming of the Messiah, and the establishment of His Church, of which Joshua and his companions are ordained to be signs. Pardon and peace are held forth as the blessed effects of Christ's coming. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. And he shewed me &c.] "The angel that talked with me," chap. ii. 3, represented to me a new vision; namely, that of "Joshua the high priest standing before the Angel of the Lord," or the Logos, mentioned chap. i. 11. He is called "the LORD" in the following verse. W. Lowth.

2. And the Lord said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee, &c.] The Logos, or Son of God, said unto Satan, "The Lord," even God the Father, "rebuke thee," and not suffer thy mischievous imagination against Jerusalem and the temple to prosper: He, that hath chosen that place for His especial residence. This text seems parallel with Gen. xix. 24, where it is said, "The LORD rained fire from the LORD out of heaven:" a text alleged by both ancient and modern writers, to prove that a distinction of Persons in the blessed Trinity was a doctrine delivered, though but imperfectly, in the Old Testament. W. Lowth.

—— is not this a brand plucked out of the fire?] Out of the furnace of Babylon. Bp. Hall. Is not this small remnant returned from captivity, miraculously rescued from utter destruction, like "a brand plucked out of the fire?" And can it be thought that God will not preserve them? Compare Amos iv. 11; Jude ver. 23. W. Lowth.

3. Now Joshua was clothed with filthy garments,] As the rags of his captivity. Bp. Hall. What is meant by the "filthy garments" is evident from what is said by the Lord in the next verse, "Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee." It is no other than the stain of moral pollution, which is in some degree found in every man, though done away by the grace of God in Christ. And it is in this respect that it is said, Isaiah lxiv. 6, "we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags." This makes us unworthy in ourselves to appear in the presence of a God of purity, and this afforded the adversary his ground of objection against Joshua. Dr. Blayney.

4. And he answered and spake unto those that stood before him,] That is, to the angels that attended on Him, Jehovah, ready to execute His commands. Dr. Blayney.

—— And unto him he said,] That is, unto Joshua. "Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee," &c.; in token of My pardoning the publick and national sins of the Jews, and that I will restore them to a more prosperous condition, I have commanded the angels, My attendants, to clothe thee with new and clean raiment, an emblem of purity, Rev. xix. 8, as well as of joyfulness and prosperity. See Eccles. ix. 8; Isai. lxi. 10. W. Lowth.

The holy garments of service are here meant, with which the priests were to be clothed, when they came into the inner court of the temple to minister before God; and these they were directed to put off, when they went into the outer court, and conversed in common with the people. Dr. Blayney.

5. And I said, Let them set &c.] "I said," that is, I, the LORD, further said and commanded. As the new garments put upon Joshua were such as belonged to the high priest, and were contrived for "glory and beauty," Exod. xxviii. 2; so the mitre was the proper ornament for his head, chap. xxix. 6. W. Lowth.

The vision imports, that the priestly office was to be resumed, and exercised with decency and splendour. Abp Newcome.

7. — then thou shalt also judge my house, &c.] Then shalt thou, and thy sons after thee, rule over My house as chief priest, and have the prime oversight and command of My courts; and at last I will give thee a place in everlasting glory, so that thou shalt walk gloriously in white among these blessed angels. Bp. Hall.

8. — thou, and thy fellows that sit before thee:] The Angel here directs His speech to Joshua and his assessors or assistants in council; bespeaking their attention to what follows, as matter of great importance. W. Lowth. The fellows of Joshua, that sat before him, may have been some of those called chief priests; who, though subordinate to the high priest, were entitled by their rank to assist in his councils. Dr. Blayney.

—— for they are men wondered at:] The margin reads, "men of wonder:" the original word signifies not only a wonder, but likewise "a sign," or "a type;" and so it is to be here understood. Compare Isai. xx. 3; viii. 18; Ezek. xii. 6, 11, 12; xxiv. 24. They are men intended for signs or tokens, they are typical men, as Bp. Chandler very properly translates the phrase; men that foreshew something to come, according to the sense of the Latin Vulgate. They, with Joshua the high priest at the head of them, are a figure of the restoration of the Church under the government of the Messiah. W. Lowth.

—— behold, I will bring forth my servant the BRANCH.] Behold, I will exhibit unto the world Christ the Saviour, whom I have ordained to work that great business of mediation for My Church; whose visible presence shall grace that temple, which ye are now to build. Bp. Hall.

The same Person must needs be intended here, as is spoken of under the same title, Jer. xxiii. 5: nor can terms so magnificent as those used in the latter place more especially be applicable to any one of less consequence than the great Messiah Himself, through whom alone iniquity is put away, and the reign of perfect peace and righteousness is to be established. Dr. Blayney.

The title of "the Branch" is often given to the Messiah as sprouting from the stock of David: He is elsewhere called "God's servant" in an eminent sense, because He was "sanctified and sent into the world" upon a message of the highest importance. See Isaiah xlii. 1; xlix. 3; lii. 13; liii. 11; Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. W. Lowth.

9. For behold the stone &c.] In signification of which Saviour, I have laid before Joshua a stone, to resemble Him who is the chief corner stone of His Church, whereon it shall be firmly built. Bp. Hall.

—— upon one stone shall be seven eyes:] To show My watchful providence over this and all other places devoted to My service; and withal the wisdom and other graces, which shall be eminent in the Messiah, the chief corner stone of all the mystical churches of God. The eye is the emblem of Providence; the number seven denotes perfection. Dr. Stokes.

—— I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day.] I will proclaim a free pardon of sins by the publishing of the Gospel; see Jer. xxxi. 34; or the words may relate to the pardoning of the Jews upon their general conversion; compare chap. xiii. 1; Jer. l. 20; Mic. vii. 18, 19. W. Lowth.

Or, we may understand by "one day," that on which Christ died to put away sins by the offering of Himself. Dr. Blayney.

10. — shall ye call every man his neighbour &c.] The meaning of this passage is to shew the peace and security that should prevail in those happy days. Mr. Harmer supposes an hospitable custom to be here alluded to, of people enjoying themselves in rural repasts in the open air, and inviting those that passed by to partake with them in their pleasures. Dr. Blayney.

Chap. IV. In this chapter the Prophet is called upon to contemplate a fifth vision of the most sublime and mysterious import. He sees a candlestick of pure gold, with its seven lamps communicating by seven pipes with a bowl at the top, which serves for a reservoir, and is constantly supplied with oil from two olive trees, standing one on each side of the candlestick. He inquires into the meaning, and receives an answer, which, though it may in some sort apply to the circumstances of the temple then in building, yet from the solemnity of the manner, and the terms in use, must be concluded to point to something far higher, no less than the final and complete establishment of Christ's holy catholick Church, not by human means, but by the power of the Holy Spirit; surmounting all obstacles thrown in its way. Annexed is a special prediction, that Zerubbabel, who had begun, should have the honour of finishing the material building of the temple; the accomplishment of which is made a sign or proof of the Divine mission. The meaning of the seven lamps is then explained, and also of the two overhanging branches of the olive trees on each side of the candlestick. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. — and waked me,] It should seem as if the Prophet was plunged into a deep reverie, musing on what he had already seen, when he was roused again by the angel to give his attention to what follows. Dr. Blayney.

2. — with a bowl upon the top of it,] To supply the lamps with oil, by seven conduits issuing from it to the seven lamps ranged in its front. Abp. Newcome.

3. And two olive trees by it,] Which in a secret imperceptible manner conveyed oil for supplying the lamps: see ver. 6. W. Lowth. They probably signified the two sacred persons that had holy unction, the king and the priest; and might intimate that a prince and a priest should continue among the Jews till the time of the Messiah. Dr. Stokes. See the note on ver. 14.

CHAP. V.

1 By the flying roll is shewed the curse of thieves and swearers. 5 By a woman pressed in an ephah, the final damnation of Babylon.

5. — Knowest thou not what these be?] Capellus observes, that this is said, not to upbraid the dulness of the Prophet, but to excite his attention. Abp. Newcome.

6. — This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel,] The purport of the answer is, This building shalt thou be able to raise and to fit for My service, not by any wealth or power of your own, for who sees not how poor and weak your nation is at this time? but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts, by the virtue and courage that I shall infuse into you all, and the means and friends that I shall raise up for you; while your own poor abilities contribute as little to the finishing of so great a work, as you do to the supply of oil for those lamps, which are fed by olive trees, raised up miraculously by Me, on purpose for that intent. Dr. Stokes.

It may be observed, that the Prophet's question, "What are these?" is answered, not by descending to an explanation of particulars, but by giving the general purport of the vision; the design being not to gratify a partial curiosity, but to comfort and encourage an almost desponding people by the assurance that God would, not by those human means, in which they were sufficiently sensible of their own deficiency, but by His own Spirit, render His Church triumphant over all opposition. Dr. Blayney.

7. Who art thou, O great mountain? &c.] Removing mountains, and levelling them into plains, are proverbial expressions to denote the overcoming of the greatest difficulties, and the removing of all obstructions. See Isai. xl. 4; Matt. xxi. 21. W. Lowth.

—— and he shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shoutings, &c.] He shall put the top or finishing stone upon the walls of the temple: which action the standers-by shall accompany with their wishes and prayers, that God's grace and favour may protect that holy place, so happily finished, and with such joyful acclamations as they used at laying its foundations; see Ezra iii. 10, 11. W. Lowth.

10. For who hath despised the day of small things? &c.] Why did ye, O ye faithless Jews, look so discontentedly on the mean foundations of this temple, and weep to think of that goodly structure of Solomon's compared with this? There shall be no cause of this disparagement. Ye shall rather find reason to rejoice in this noble work, which ye see Zerubbabel in hand to finish, &c. Bp. Hall.

By "the day of small things" I suppose to be meant the time, when the resources of the Jewish nation appeared in the eyes of many, even well-wishers, so small and inadequate to the building of the temple, against a powerful opposition, that they despaired of seeing it carried into effect. Such persons would of course rejoice, when the event turned out so contrary to their expectations. Dr. Blayney.

—— the plummet] The use of the plummet is to try, after the stone is laid, whether it be in its just position. Dr. Blayney.

—— with those seven; they are the eyes of the Lord,] The Seventy translate the words to a better sense, taking them for a distinct sentence from what goes before, "These seven are the eyes of the Lord," &c. W. Lowth. Here is an answer to the question, ver. 4, "What are these?" "These seven (lamps) are the eyes," &c.: an emblem of God's infinite providence and care, which extends itself over all things, and especially over His own people. He then asks, "What are the olive trees?" Dr. Stokes.

12. — olive branches] Young olives; see ver. 3. W. Lowth. "Branches of the olive trees," bearing much fruit like an ear of corn. Abp. Newcome.

—— pipes] Or spouts, laid inclining from the olive trees to the bowl upon the top of the candlestick, so as to receive the fluid from the trees, and pour it continually into the bowl to supply the waste. Dr. Blayney.

—— the golden oil] In the original "the gold." The liquor drawn from the olive trees must be oil, here on account of its precious quality denominated gold, which is considered the most valuable of all metals, but yet of far less worth than the word of Divine truth: see Ps. xix. 10; cxix. 72. Perhaps also the term may be used to signify the resemblance between oil, and gold in a fluid state. Dr. Blayney.

14. — These are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth.] Rather, "before the Lord," and minister to Him. See Deut. x. 8; 1 Kings xvii. 1. W. Lowth. Zerubbabel and Joshua may be meant, who presided over the temporal and spiritual affairs of the Jews; were the ministers or vicegerents of Jehovah; and acted, not by their own strength, but by the Divine assistance, ver. 6. The golden candlestick is the Jewish state, both civil and religious; and the oil, with which the lamps are supplied, is the Spirit of God, contradistinguished from human efforts. Abp. Newcome.

Or, by the two olive trees are meant the two dispensations of the Law and the Gospel, under which were communicated the precious oracles of Divine truth, which illuminate the soul, and make men wise unto salvation. Dr. Blayney.

Chap. V. The visions represented in this chapter are of a very different kind from the preceding ones. Hitherto all has been consoling, and meant to cheer the hearts of the Jewish people, by

Before CHRIST 519.

THEN I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold a flying roll.

2 And he said unto me, What seest thou? And I answered, I see a flying roll; the length thereof is twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof ten cubits.

3 Then said he unto me, This is the curse that goeth forth over the face of the whole earth: for ‖ every one that stealeth shall be cut off as on this side according to it; and every one that sweareth shall be cut off as on that side according to it.

‖ Or, every one of this people that stealeth holdeth himself guiltless, as it doth.

4 I will bring it forth, saith the LORD of hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by my name: and it shall remain in the midst of his house, and shall consume it with the timber thereof and the stones thereof.

5 ¶ Then the angel that talked with me went forth, and said unto me, Lift up now thine eyes, and see what is this that goeth forth.

Before CHRIST 519.

6 And I said, What is it? And he said, This is an ephah that goeth forth. He said moreover, This is their resemblance through all the earth.

7 And, behold, there was lifted up a ‖ talent of lead: and this is a woman that sitteth in the midst of the ephah.

‖ Or, weighty piece.

8 And he said, This is wickedness. And he cast it into the midst of the ephah; and he cast the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof.

9 Then lifted I up mine eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came out two women, and the wind was in their wings; for they had wings like the wings of a stork: and they lifted up the ephah between the earth and the heaven.

holding forth to them prospects of approaching prosperity. But lest they should grow presumptuous and careless of their conduct, it was thought proper to warn them of the conditions on which their happiness would depend; and to let them see, that however God was at present disposed to shew them favour, His judgments would assuredly fall upon them with still greater weight than before, if they should again provoke Him by repeated wickedness. Accordingly in the first of these visions, which was the sixth in succession, the Prophet is shewn an immense roll of a book, like that which Ezekiel describes, chap. ii. 9, 10, filled with curses, and in the act of flying, to denote the celerity and speed, as well as the certainty, with which the thief and false swearer, who might otherwise flatter themselves with hopes of impunity, would be visited to their utter destruction. The next vision presents the appearance of an ephah, or measure, in which sat a woman representing a nation, whose wickedness was arrived at such a height as required an immediate check. Accordingly a heavy cover is cast upon her, and she is carried into exile in a distant land, there to abide the full time allotted for her punishment. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 2. — a flying roll;] The roll of a book, as it is expressed Jer. xxxvi. 2; Ezek. ii. 9: the ancient way of writing being upon long scrolls of parchment. These scrolls were usually longer than they were broad; so this is represented as ten yards in length, and five in breadth. W. Lowth. The roll was very ample, to shew what a number of curses should come upon the wicked. Abp. Newcome.

3. — This is the curse that goeth forth over the face of the whole earth:] Or rather, "of the whole land," meaning the land of Judea. The roll contained the curses; that is, the judgments, denounced against the Jews, who were guilty of the sins here specified. It was written on both sides, as the roll mentioned Ezek. ii. 10. On one side were contained the judgments against stealing, on the other those against false swearing. W. Lowth.

4. — It shall enter into the house of the thief, &c.] The curse denounced in this roll shall take hold of the man and his family, and shall never leave them till they are utterly consumed. It shall be like the leprosy that infects an house, and cannot be purged, till the house itself be pulled down. See Lev. xiv. 45. W. Lowth.

By this is signified God's determinate counsel and purpose, not to suffer the thief or the false swearer to go unpunished. The roll will meet with them, the curse will light upon them one time or other, and destroy them root and branch. Bp. Beveridge.

This vision may be considered as a republication of the curses contained in Deut. xxvii, xxviii. The thief and the false swearer, says Capellus, are put for every kind of transgression. Abp. Newcome. Among the Jews, an oath was tendered to him that was suspected of theft: see Lev. vi. 2. For this reason the thief and the perjured person are here put together. Abp. Tillotson.

5. — Then the angel — went forth,] Or, "went on." W. Lowth. Or, advanced onward, to see the object which presented itself at a distance. Abp. Newcome.

—— what is this that goeth forth.] That is now represented unto thee, as passing forth before thee. Bp. Hall.

6. — This is an ephah] The vessel here mentioned resembled the common ephah, which was about the size of our bushel, not in size, but in figure. Dr. Wells. The extraordinary measure of the vessel corresponds with the iniquities that prevailed in the land. Dr. Blayney.

—— this is their resemblance through all the earth.] Or, "through all the land." By this you may make an estimate of their unjust dealings all the land over; compare ver. 3, 4. An ephah, being the dry measure among the Jews, denotes their unjust dealings in buying and selling. See Amos viii. 5. W. Lowth.

7. And, behold, there was lifted up a talent of lead: &c.] And, behold, there was also represented unto me a leaden weight; and withal a woman sitting in the midst of the ephah. Bp. Hall. The margin correctly gives the sense, "a weighty piece" of lead.

—— and this is a woman that sitteth in the midst of the ephah.] Or, "And, behold, there was a woman sitting in the midst of the ephah." Dr. Wells. Or, these words may be the angel's explanation of the vision, What thou seest besides is a woman in the midst of, or within, the ephah. W. Lowth.

8. And he said, This is wickedness.] The woman represented the wicked Jews, of whom the angel said, These are so wicked, that they are as wickedness itself. Bp. Hall.

—— And he cast it into the midst of the ephah; &c.] To signify, that when a people have filled up the measure of their iniquity, they sink under the weight of their sins, and cannot escape the judgment of God. W. Lowth.

9. — behold, there came out two women, &c.] These may probably signify the empires of Assyria and Babylon. Empires and kingdoms are sometimes described as having wings, to denote the swiftness of their conquests. See Deut. xxviii. 49; Jer. xlix. 22; Hos. viii. 1. W. Lowth. Or, these circumstances may indicate nothing more particular, than that Providence would make use of quick and forcible means to effect its purpose. The stork, like other birds of passage, is provided with strong wings. Dr. Blayney.

—— and they lifted up the ephah &c.] The Assyrians carried away captive the ten tribes; and then the Babylonians took away

Before CHRIST 519.

10 Then said I to the angel that talked with me, Whither do these bear the ephah?

11 And he said unto me, To build it an house in the land of Shinar: and it shall be established, and set there upon her own base.

CHAP. VI.

1 The vision of the four chariots. 9 By the crowns of Joshua is shewed the temple and kingdom of Christ the Branch.

AND I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came four chariots out from between two mountains; and the mountains were mountains of brass.

2 In the first chariot were red horses; and in the second chariot black horses;

3 And in the third chariot white horses; and in the fourth chariot grisled and ‖ bay horses.

Before CHRIST 519.

4 Then I answered and said unto the angel that talked with me, What are these, my lord?

5 And the angel answered and said unto me, These are the four ‖ spirits of the heavens, which go forth from standing before the LORD of all the earth.

‖ Or, winds.

7 And the bay went forth, and sought to go that they might walk to and fro through the remainder of the Jews, and made an entire riddance of the people of the land. W. Lowth.

---

11. And he said unto me, To build it an house in the land of Shinar: &c.] Or, "To build her," that is, the woman, "an house" &c. The design of the vision is to instruct the Jews, that as their fathers were carried into a seventy years' captivity to Babylon, so, if their posterity should not take warning by their punishment, a worse captivity should befall them; one of so long a continuance, as should make them despair of ever returning home, and resolve to settle themselves in those countries where they were dispersed. This is expressed by removing them to Babylon, which was a proverbial expression for utter ruin and desolation. W. Lowth.

The meaning of the vision seems to be, that the Babylonish captivity had happened on account of the wickedness committed by the Jews; and that a like dispersion would befall them, if they relapsed into the like crimes. Thus the whole chapter will be an awful admonition, that multiplied curses, and particularly dispersion and captivity, would be the punishment of national guilt. Abp. Newcome.

Chap. VI. The main design and purport of the eighth and last vision, contained in the former part of this chapter, was to confirm the Jews in their faith and dependence upon God, by shewing them that, weak and defenceless as they seemed to be, they had nothing to fear from the greatest earthly powers, whilst they remained under the Divine protection: since all those powers originally proceeded from the counsels of the Almighty, were the instruments of His providence, and could not subsist nor act but under His permission. Four chariots drawn by horses of different colours represent the four great empires of the world in succession, the Assyrian or Babylonian, the Persian, Grecian, and Roman, distinguishable both by their order and by their attributes. The first is only enumerated, and nothing more said of it, having already run its career. The second is characterized by going forth against the land of the north. The third by going forth against the posterity of the preceding. And the fourth, whose horses were spotted and strong, by their conquests in the south. These are also said to be ambitious, soliciting and obtaining permission to extend their dominion far and wide. The second are also said to have already executed God's judgments upon the land of the north.

After this the Prophet is favoured with another revelation respecting a kingdom different from all the preceding. By God's command, in the presence of witnesses, and for a memorial to them, he places a crown, or crowns, upon the head of Joshua the high priest, thereby constituting him a type of Christ "the BRANCH," whom he proclaims as about to come to build the spiritual temple of Jehovah, and to preside over it both as King and Priest, for the great purpose of peace. The accession of strangers to assist in building the temple is foretold, and given as a proof of the Prophet's divine mission. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. —four chariots] A chariot is in itself no unfit emblem of government. But a chariot of war very aptly represents a conquering nation, rushing furiously on, and overturning all before it. Such were the four formidable empires before mentioned. Dr. Blayney.

The two brasen mountains may denote God's firm and immutable decrees, by which He governs the earth. Abp. Newcome.

2. — red horses; &c.] The "red horses" may signify the bloody cruelties of the Babylonish empire, especially towards the Jews; the "black," the sad and mournful estate of the Jews under the Persian successors of Cyrus; the "white," the victories of Alexander, (white horses being used by conquerors in days of triumph,) and his kindness towards the Jews: and the "grisled," the various forms of the Roman government. W. Lowth. Or, probably the colours of the horses design no more than the diversity of the people, of whom the four empires respectively consisted; not any characteristick quality belonging to them. Dr. Blayney.

3. — bay horses.] Or, "strong horses," as the Latin Vulgate renders the word. W. Lowth. This sense is preferable, because the Roman empire, here designed, is characterized by Daniel, chap. vii. 7, 19, 23, as more strong and powerful than any of the preceding. Dr. Blayney.

5. — These are the four spirits of the heavens, &c.] Rather, as it is in the margin, agreeably to the Greek and Latin versions, "four winds." Compare Dan. vii. 2. Like strong winds, these chariots rushed violently on, and produced great agitations and commotions in the earth, the effect of strong winds both by land and by sea. And these winds are said to go forth from attending upon the Lord of the whole earth; that is, they waited His pleasure, and went forth like ministers, "fulfilling His word," Ps. cxlviii. 8. Dr. Blayney.

6. The black horses—go forth into the north country;] Denoting the conquests of the Persians over the Babylonians, often expressed by "the north" in the Prophets. The angel says nothing of the red horses, because the Babylonian empire was at an end. W. Lowth.

—— the white go forth after them;] Alexander and his armies go forth to conquer the Persians. W. Lowth.

—— the grisled go forth toward the south country.] This probably denotes the Roman conquests in Egypt, frequently called the "south country" in Scripture. This was the last country subdued by the Romans under Augustus, whereby they became masters of the greatest part of the then known world. W. Lowth.

7. And the bay went forth, and sought to go &c.] The restless ambition of the Romans is here described, who under the Divine permission extended their conquests to every quarter of the globe. In the preceding verse it is said of "the black horses" in the present tense, that they "go forth;" whereas the past tense is used of "the white" and "the grisled," in the original; as it is here also said, that "the bay went forth." To account for this difference we must understand, that the former words were spoken by the angel, who explains what was passing at the instant. But the latter is the Prophet's relation of what appeared to him afterwards. Dr. Blayney.

8. — Behold, these that go toward the north country have quieted my spirit &c.] The Persians, by conquering the Babylonians, have appeased My wrath, by executing upon them that vengeance which they have deserved for their cruelty towards My people. W. Lowth.

The foregoing exposition is given according to the prevailing sense of our commentators. Poole, who recites several interpretations, appears to incline to that, which understands "the four spirits of the heavens," ver. 5, to signify angels, who have, as ministers of Divine Providence, a great share in the management of affairs both of church and state; and which considers the vision in general as a representation of these servants of the Lord, acting their part in the revolutions and changes of things, be these of what temper soever they may, till the Gospel be preached by the Messiah and His Apostles. His remark upon the whole of the vision is judicious, and well worthy of attention. "The appearance or emblem is plain enough, we can easily conceive that: but the things signified hereby are most difficultly found out, and perhaps not found when we think they are; here then, if any where, all are bound to write modestly, and all are bound to read carefully, and to judge candidly." Edit.

10. Take of them of the captivity, &c.] The exiles, who remained in Babylon, shewed their regard for the temple, then building, by sending their gifts and oblations to Jerusalem for carrying on the work, and adorning the temple after it was built. These offerings they sent by the persons here named, as they did afterwards by Ezra and his companions: see Ezra vii. 16; viii. 25, 26. W. Lowth.

11. Then take silver and gold, and make crowns, &c.] Rather, "Even take the silver and the gold," &c. A plate or crown of gold was an ornament placed upon the mitre of the high priest: see Exod xxviii. 36; xxix. 6; Lev. viii. 9. Two such crowns are here ordered to be made, and to be placed upon the head of Joshua, to signify that the Messiah, "The BRANCH," spoken of in the next verse, of whom Joshua was a type, should be both a King and Priest, and so should have a right to wear the crowns belonging to those two offices. W. Lowth.

12. — Behold the man whose name is The BRANCH;] See in the person of Joshua the high priest, the type or representation of the Man, whose "name is the Christ that shall be revealed," as the Targum paraphrases the text. W. Lowth. There cannot be a doubt that the same Person is meant by "The BRANCH" here, who is so called chap. iii. 8; namely, the Messiah; of whom Joshua is made the type or representative by the crown placed on his head. The passage will not answer to any other but to Him, who was at once both King and Priest, and, by uniting both characters in Himself, was completely qualified to bring about "the counsel of peace," or reconciliation between God and man. Dr. Blayney.

—— he shall build the temple of the Lord:] The Church of Christ is expressly called "the temple of God," 1 Cor. iii. 16; 2 Cor. vi. 16; "a spiritual house," 1 Pet. ii. 5, &c. Dr. Blayney.

13. Even he shall build the temple of the Lord;] This clause is highly emphatical; implying that "even He," the selfsame Person, who should build the temple of Jehovah, even He should have the honour of governing and presiding in it, as both King and Priest, in both capacities advancing the peace and prosperity of His people. Dr. Blayney.

—— and he shall bear the glory,] That is, the honour and authority, belonging to a sovereign or chief ruler. So when Moses was directed to give up his command and authority to Joshua, it is said, "And thou shalt put some of thine honour upon him," Numb. xxvii. 20. And in this sense Christ was to "receive glory;" see Ps. xxi. 5; Dan. vii. 14; Acts iii. 13; v. 31; Phil. ii. 9—11; Heb. ii. 9. He was to be exalted to the right hand of God, there to sit upon His throne as a King, governing His Church, and as a Priest, making intercession continually for it. It is impossible not to see, that this prophecy was completed in Christ, so as it never could be in any other person. Dr. Blayney.

—— and the counsel of peace shall be between them both.] The kingdom and priesthood being united in the same Person, there shall be no clashing of jurisdiction between the two offices. W. Lowth.

14. And the crowns shall be to Helem, &c.] And those crowns shall be kept and hanged up in the temple of the Lord, as a memorial and monument of the liberal offering, made by Helem, and Tobijah, &c.; (Bp. Hall;) and of the use, for which they had been made. W. Lowth, Dr. Wells. If the crowns, after having been placed on the head of Joshua, were deposited in a conspicuous part of the temple, they would naturally remind the persons present of the prediction, which they would of course communicate to others. Dr. Blayney.

"Helem" was probably the same person as Heldai, and "Hen" as Josiah: such variety of names belonging to the same person may be often observed in the books of Kings and Chronicles. W. Lowth.

15. And they that are far off shall come &c.] This is a plain prediction of the coming in of the Gentiles, whom St. Paul expressly calls those "who were far off," Eph. ii. 13, to "build," or constitute a part of the Christian Church. Dr. Blayney.

—— And this shall come to pass, &c.] And ye of the Jewish nation shall be the first sharers in the benefits arising from Christ's kingdom and priesthood, and then those that are "far off," if you diligently listen to the voice of God, speaking to you both by His Prophets, and by His Son. W. Lowth.

Chap. VII. In this chapter is contained a third and distinct revelation made to Zechariah about two years after the former; of which the occasion and matter are as follows. A considerable progress having by this time been made in the rebuilding of the temple, and affairs going on pretty smoothly, the hopes of the Jewish nation began to revive, and a deputation was sent to inquire of the priests and the Prophets, whether it was God's will that they should still continue to observe the fast, which had been instituted on account of the city and the temple having been burnt by the Chaldeans. To this the Prophet is directed to reply, That this and another fast of the like kind, being of their own appointment, regarded themselves only, and not God; that what He required of them was the practice of moral righteousness, like as He had enjoined it to their fathers, who, disregarding His injunctions, had brought upon themselves and upon their country all the evil which they had recently experienced.

Having thus accounted for God's past severity, the Prophet in the following chapter goes on to inform them, that the anger of Jehovah was now appeased, and He was again disposed to be gracious unto His people, and to restore Jerusalem. He exhorts them therefore to proceed vigorously with the building of the temple, and assures them that they would from that instant experience a happy revolution in their affairs. He renews his exhortation to the practice of moral goodness, and promises them on that condition their fasts should be turned into joyful feasts; and they should be so distinguished by the Divine favour, that many nations would be eager to embrace their religion, and sue for their alliance. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. — Chisleu;] This month corresponded with the latter part of November, and the beginning of December. Dr. Blayney.

5. — When ye fasted &c.] When ye fasted and mourned, both in the fifth month for the temple, and in the seventh for the murder of Gedaliah, 2 Kings xxv. 25, did ye do this, even all these seventy years, out of any charge of Mine? or did ye it out of any true remorse for those sins of yours, which drew down these judgments upon you; and not rather out of a sense of your own misery and sorrow? And, on the contrary, when, on your other solemn festivals, ye did eat and drink and make merry, was it out of any spiritual joy which ye had in Me and My service, and not rather for your own pleasure and jollity? Bp. Hall. The sense of these two verses is much the same with that of St. Paul, 1 Cor. viii. 8; namely, that eating or abstaining from meat is in its own nature indifferent; nor is it acceptable to God any further than it is subservient to the true ends of religion.

The Prophet first reproves the hypocrisy of their fasts, before he gives them a direct answer to the question proposed. This he does chap. viii. 19. W. Lowth.

7. Should ye not hear the words &c.] Or, "Are not these the words," as in the margin. He puts them in mind of the exhortations given to them by the Prophets before the captivity. W. Lowth. This may refer to the fifth and sixth verses: Did not the former Prophets make the like declarations, concerning the inefficacy of your external observances? see Isai. lviii. 6, &c. It may also refer to the ninth verse: And did not the former Prophets insist on the superiour excellence of moral duties? see Amos v. 24; Micah vi. 8, &c. Abp. Newcome.

—— the south and the plain?] See the note on Jer. xvii. 26.

9. — Execute true judgment, &c.] I have often admonished your fathers, that judgment and mercy were more acceptable to Me than fasting or any external performances, and I repeat the same admonition to you of the present age. W. Lowth.

Chap. VIII. ver. 3. — a city of truth;] Jerusalem shall be again the seat of truth and justice, her magistrates being restored to execute their authority there. W. Lowth. Rather, "the city of the truth;" the truth, by way of eminence, or the true religion: so that Jerusalem was to be celebrated in future as the city in which the true religion particularly was professed, as "the mountain of the Lord of hosts," meaning the mountain of the temple was to be for the residence of the Most Holy One. Dr. Blayney.

4. — with his staff in his hand for very age.] A mode of expressing his being very old. Dr. Blayney.

6. — If it be marvellous &c.] And do not startle at it, saith the Lord of hosts; for though this may seem a strange and wonderful thing in the apprehension of this poor remnant of the people, that are now returned out of the land of their captivity; yet nothing should seem impossible to Me, saith the Lord of hosts. Dr. Stokes.

7. — Behold, I will save my people &c.] This denotes the general restoration of the Jewish nation from their several dispersions; compare verses 13, 20, 23; an event foretold by most of the Prophets of the Old Testament: see the note on Isai. xi. 11. "The west country" appears to have a particular relation to their present dispersion, great numbers of them being in these latter ages settled in the western parts of the world. See the notes on Isai. xxiv. 14, and Hos. xi. 10. W. Lowth. At the time of the delivery of this prophecy, there were very few or no Jews dispersed west of the Holy Land. Dr. Wells.

8. — in truth and in righteousness.] These words apply equally to God and His people; and imply, that they shall on both sides truly and faithfully perform the conditions of the covenant, once more renewed between them. Dr. Blayney.

9. — ye that hear in these days &c.] "These days" stand opposed to "the day that the foundation of the house of the Lord of hosts was laid," which was two years before. And the people are exhorted to proceed vigorously with the building, inasmuch as they now heard repeated by the mouth of the Prophets the same things which had prevailed on them at first to engage in it. Dr. Blayney.

10. — there was no hire for man,] Rather, "there was no reward for man," &c. The fruits of the earth would not pay the labour of those who manured it. See Hag. i. 9—11; ii. 16, 17. W. Lowth.

—— neither was there any peace &c.] The adversaries of the Jews ceased not to molest them from without, Ezra iv. 1, &c.; and civil dissensions, it seems, prevailed within. Dr. Blayney.

13. — O house of Judah, and house of Israel;] The mention both of Judah and of Israel, which had been so long separated, shews that both the curse and the blessing, here spoken of, in the ultimate sense of the prophecy, belong to the whole body of the Jews. W. Lowth.

and righteousness, which God commanded their fathers by the Prophets, as "the weightier matters of the law," and now again enjoined upon them. See chap. vii. 9, 10. W. Lowth.

19. — The fast of the fourth month, &c.] Besides the two fasts mentioned, chap. vii. 5, the Jews observed two others; that of the fourth month, when Jerusalem was taken, Jer lii. 6, 7; and that of the tenth month, when the Babylonians began the siege, Jer. lii. 4. In answer to the question proposed, chap. vii. 3, the Prophet here tells them, that they may now disuse these fasts, and lay aside the mournful circumstances, with which they were solemnized; since the judgments which occasioned them were removed. W. Lowth.

—— therefore love the truth and peace.] God values an upright conversation more than the exactest care of outward performances: see ver. 16; and the note on chap. vii. 9. These instructions prepared men's minds for receiving the Gospel, the laws of which chiefly recommend purity of heart and life: see Jer. xxxi. 33. W. Lowth.

21. And the inhabitants of one city shall go &c.] These expressions allude to the Jews going up in companies to Jerusalem at their solemn feasts. Compare Isai. ii. 2, 3; Micah iv. 1, 2. W. Lowth.

23. — ten men] A certain number for an uncertain. See the last note on Mic. v. 5. W. Lowth.

—— shall take hold of the skirt] Mr. Harmer, having observed that it was customary in the East to kiss the hem of the garment of a person of rank, and especially when a favour was asked or granted, adds, that "ten men taking hold of the skirt of a Jew" is to be understood as an application of the most submissive kind, to be taken under his protection, or received among his dependents. That it was a mode of humble solicitation is evident from 1 Sam. xv. 27: and like that of embracing the knees, and laying hold on the feet, it was the natural gesture of an importunate suitor, who would seem to say thereby, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me." Dr. Blayney.

This and the three foregoing verses refer in some measure to the great accession of converts, which the Jewish church received between the captivity and the coming of Christ; but principally to the number of Christian disciples, which the Jewish preachers made; and perhaps to the future conversions, of which the restoration of the Jews will be an eminent cause. Abp. Newcome.

Chap. IX. This chapter begins with announcing the fate of the Syrians, Sidonians, and Philistines, contrasted with the better prospects of the Jewish nation. It foretells the coming of the Messiah to Jerusalem, and the peace of His kingdom. The restoration of Israel and Judah is afterwards predicted, together with a series of glorious victories and great prosperity, which are set forth at large in this and the next chapter. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. The burden of the word of the Lord in the land of Hadrach,] "The burden of the word of the Lord" is a burdensome prophecy, threatening ruin and destruction: see Jer. xxiii. 33; Nahum i. 1. Hadrach is not elsewhere mentioned as the name of a country: the context shews it to be some part of Syria. W. Lowth.

—— and Damascus shall be the rest thereof:] God's anger rests on those whom He punishes, Ezek. v. 13; xvi. 42; xxiv. 13. And His rod or His arm rests upon His enemies, Ps. cxxv. 3; Isai. xxx. 32. Abp. Newcome. The land of Hadrach and Damascus is here said to be the place, on which "the burden" or calamity was to "rest" or settle; that is, the land would still continue to be visited by the like calamities as it had before undergone, first under Tiglath-pileser, as prophesied by Isaiah, chap. xvii, and Amos, chap. i. 3—5; and again under Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xlix. 23. Dr. Blayney.

—— when the eyes of man, as of all the tribes of Israel, shall be toward the Lord.] This plainly implies, that a time would come, when men, and the tribes of Israel in particular, should turn their eyes towards Jehovah, and look up to Him, either in hopes of deriving some blessing from Him, or in gratitude for mercies received. But the scope of the prophecy goes to shew, that even at that time those devoted nations had no prospect of emerging; "the burden" would still "rest" or settle upon them. Dr. Blayney.

2, 3. And Hamath also shall border thereby; &c.] Neither shall Hamath be freed therefrom: nor Tyrus, and Zidon, though they be crafty and subtle enough, to use all human power and wit for their own safety and evasion; and though Tyrus have built strong holds for her defence, and have heaped up great treasures of wealth. Bp. Hall.

3. — and heaped up silver as the dust, &c.] Tyre was the most celebrated place in the world for trade and riches, "the mart of nations," conveying the commodities of the East to the West, and of the West to the East. Bp. Newton.

[b] Isai. 62. 11. Matt. 21. 5. John 12. 15.

4. Behold, the Lord will cast her out, &c.] Ezekiel had likewise foretold that the city should be consumed by fire, chap. xxviii. 18. And accordingly Alexander besieged, and took, and set the city on fire. The ruins of old Tyre contributed much to the taking of the new city: for with the stones and timber and rubbish of the old city Alexander built a bank or causey from the continent to the island, thereby literally fulfilling the words of Ezekiel, "they shall lay thy stones and thy timber and thy dust in the midst of the water," chap. xxvi. 12. Bp. Newton.

5. Ashkelon shall see it, &c.] The cities of the Philistines, Ashkelon, Gaza, and Ekron, shall be very much terrified at the news of Tyre's destruction, whence they hoped for succours against the enemy. W. Lowth.

—— the king shall perish from Gaza,] By the title of "king" any chief ruler may be designed; so that the plain purport of the passage is, that Gaza should cease to enjoy the benefit of civil government. Accordingly Gaza, having suffered severely on being taken by Alexander the Great, was at length totally ruined and destroyed by Alexander Jannæus, one of the Asmonean kings of Judea: so that we find it spoken of in Acts viii. 26, by the name of "Gaza, which is desert." Dr. Blayney.

—— Ashkelon shall not be inhabited.] Ashkelon and the other cities of the Philistines having been subjugated by Nebuchadnezzar, as foretold by Jeremiah, chap. xlvii, never recovered their former independency; but, falling under the dominion of the great empires in succession, were almost continually involved in their wars, and suffered considerably, till by degrees they dwindled away, and at last sunk to nothing. Zephaniah's prophecy, chap. ii. 4—7, extends to this. Dr. Blayney.

6. And a bastard shall dwell in Ashdod, &c.] The word, rendered "bastard," does not here imply an illegitimate offspring, but simply one of foreign extraction. So that it is meant, that the city should be peopled with strangers, not descended from its present possessors. Ashdod, or Azotus, was burned and destroyed by Jonathan, brother of Judas Maccabeus, and eight thousand of its men burned or slain, 1 Mac. x. 84, 85. These were probably what was meant by "the pride of the Philistines," the prime or excellency of the ancient inhabitants, in whose room the strangers were introduced. Dr. Blayney.

7. And I will take away his blood out of his mouth, &c.] The idolatrous and abominable practices of the Philistines shall cease. The metaphor is taken from beasts of prey, who gorge themselves with blood. Abp. Newcome.

At what time or whence the new colony was brought to dwell in Ashdod, we are not informed. But some years after, in the reign of Alexander Jannæus, Azotus is enumerated by Josephus among the cities of the Phenicians, which the Jews had been some time possessed of: and it is well known, that that people exacted of all that were under their dominion a conformity, to a certain degree at least, to their religious rites and usages. This will serve to explain what is here meant by "taking his blood out of his mouth, and his abominations from between his teeth." The stranger was required to abstain from eating blood, and from such things as were held in abomination by the Jewish law. Dr. Blayney.

—— but he that remaineth, even he, shall be for our God, &c.] Those that remain of them shall be conscientiously devoted to God; and shall become friends aad patrons of My people within My Church; yea, even those of Ekron shall so have a part in My Church, as the Jebusite hath in the material and outward Jerusalem. Bp. Hall.

To be "as a governour in Judah" means to be regarded and honoured. The Jebusites were inhabitants of Jerusalem, Judg. i. 21. Josephus informs us, that many of the Philistines became proselytes to Judaism, and particularly the cities of Gaza and Ashdod. Abp. Newcome.

8. And I will encamp about mine house &c.] Amid the foregoing revolutions and alterations of affairs in the world, God here promises to preserve His temple, while so many castles and strong holds about Jerusalem were overturned, so many cities swept of their inhabitants by the besom of destruction. Bp. Horne.

—— for now have I seen with mine eyes.] Mine eye has pervaded future events, and I have thus determined. Abp. Newcome. Or, I have looked on the condition of My people with an eye of pity and compassion. W. Lowth.

9. Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; &c.] From the promise contained in the foregoing verse, of God's protecting His Church and temple, the Prophet in a sudden transport takes occasion to break forth into a joyful representation of the coming of the Messiah. W. Lowth. With reference to this event the passage is cited in two places of the New Testament, Matt. xxi. 5; John xii. 15: so that we can have no doubt of the application. Dr. Blayney.

Beautiful and striking is the manner, in which this prophecy is introduced. The Prophet does not coldly inform Jerusalem, that her king should come to her, and that, when He did come, she ought to rejoice. Rapt into future times, he seems to have been present at the glorious scene. Standing upon mount Olivet, he hears the hosannas of the disciples, and beholds the procession approach towards the gates of Jerusalem: he turns himself to the city, and breaks forth in transport, "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem." Bp. Horne.

—— behold, thy king cometh unto thee:] These words assign the reason, why Jerusalem was called on to rejoice; namely, the approach of her King: "behold, thy King cometh unto thee." A Person was to visit Jerusalem, who should deserve to be emphatically styled her "King." The nations had their kings and conquerors, their Nebuchadnezzars and Cyrus's, their Alexanders and Cesars: these appeared in their turns upon the stage, contending for the empire of the world. Each performed the part assigned him by an all-directing Providence, and then vanished away. Zion beheld all these changes, and still survived the commotions occasioned by them. The Prophets had promised her a King, who should overcome her enemies, and triumph gloriously; who should erect, in the time of the fourth great monarchy, an universal and everlasting kingdom, and give laws to the world; nay, who should govern all things in heaven and earth. Bp. Horne.

Jews in our Saviour's time, (see John i. 49,) and called elsewhere by the name of "David their King," Jer. xxx. 9; Hos. iii. 5. W. Lowth.

—— he is just, and having salvation; lowly, &c.] Righteousness, salvation, and humility, were to distinguish the person and reign of the Messiah. Righteousness leads the way: "He is just" or righteous. St. Stephen affirms the Prophets to have foreshewn the coming of Jesus under the title of "the Just One," Acts vii. 52. See Ps. xlv. 4; Jer. xxiii. 6: and compare Matt. xxvii. 4, 19; Luke xxiii. 4, 47. Salvation is the next sign or token of the King of Zion. "He is just, and having salvation." He was to execute that part of the regal office, which consisted in rescuing a people from their oppressors. The history of Israel contains an account of many "saviours," raised up at sundry times for this purpose. Such were Moses, Barak, Gideon, Samson, and many more in the ages after them. But the deliverances, effected by any of these, were not to be mentioned, unless as shadows and faint resemblances of that grand and complete salvation, which the promised Saviour should accomplish. See Luke ii. 11; Matt. i. 21. The Messiah was to be distinguished from all other kings and conquerors by His appearance likewise and demeanour. He was to visit His people in great humility, "lowly, and riding upon an ass." Though God, He was to become man: see Isai. vii. 14; Matt. i. 23. He was to be "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief:" see Isai. lii. 14, and the whole of the fifty-third chapter, especially ver. 3. He was to keep the law, and to die for sin; see Ps. xl. 7; Heb. x. 7. From all which passages it is plain, that Messiah was to be an humble and a suffering character. The types and the prophecies are as plain for His humiliation, as they are for His exaltation: nor could any one person accomplish them all, without being equally remarkable for lowliness and meekness, glory and honour. Bp. Horne.

—— riding upon an ass, and upon a colt &c.] Or, "even upon a colt" &c. See John xii. 14; Luke xix. 30. A proof of lowliness, and that He did not affect the pomp of the world, but came with the same primitive simplicity as the patriarchs and judges used of old. See Gen. xxii. 3; Judges v. 10; x. 4. W. Lowth, Bp. Chandler.

The character given of the Messiah, that He should ride on an ass, was in opposition to the pride of the warlike kings of Israel, who, by their great strength in chariots and horses, had ruined themselves and their people. And herein He was to resemble those, who had indeed been deliverers of their country; kings, who feared God, and therefore feared no enemy; who, though mounted on asses, and colts the foals of asses, were able to put to flight the thousands and ten thousands of chariots and horses that came against them. Bp. Sherlock.

The ancient Jews explained this prophecy of the Messiah; and it is plain from the Gospels, that the Jews in Christ's time understood it so, Matt. xxi. 8, 9; Luke xix. 37, 38; Mark xi. 10. Bp. Chandler, W. Lowth.

10. And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, &c.] Ephraim and Judah shall not engage in war to spread the Messiah's kingdom, but their spiritual King shall peaceably convert Gentiles, and shall extend His dominion every where. Abp. Newcome.

In the state of meekness and lowliness, before described, Christ was to gain a complete victory over the enemies of man's salvation. The warfare was new, and it is no wonder that the weapons employed in it should be uncommon. Other warriours prepare their horses and their chariots, their bows, their spears, and their shields. But Messiah disarms His followers, in order that they may overcome. No plainer declaration could have been made, that the conquests of Messiah were not to be of a secular nature; that His kingdom was not of this world. See John xviii. 36. Bp. Horne.

—— and he shall speak peace unto the heathen:] As well as to His own people the Jews. Accordingly, when the Prince of Peace came to make His abode amongst us, the angelick choir descended to sing "Peace on earth;" peace with God, by the pardon of sin; peace with ourselves, by the answer of a clear conscience; peace with one another, by mutual charity. And who would not wish to see, who would not labour to promote, the full accomplishment of the last clause of the prophecy, in the extension of this kingdom and dominion of Christ "from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth;" that so all the nations of the world might remember themselves, and turn to the Lord Jesus, as many did at the first preaching of His Gospel! Bp. Horne.

This prophecy, together with those of Hosea, chap. ii. 18; Micah v. 5, 10; Haggai ii. 22, as they foretell the outward peacefulness of Christ's Church or kingdom, relate to the flourishing state of it in the latter times of the world. The words which denote the extent of that kingdom, "His dominion shall be from sea" &c. are taken from Ps. lxxii. 8, where David describes the extent of Solomon's kingdom, from the Red sea to the Mediterranean, and from the river Euphrates to the border of Egypt: compare Exod. xxiii. 31; 1 Kings iv. 21; Deut. xi. 24. This, as appears from several expressions in that Psalm, was a figurative description of Christ's kingdom, which should be enlarged towards the four quarters of the world. W. Lowth.

11. — by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit &c.] As for thee, O Zion, whose covenant with Me is made and confirmed by the precious blood of the Messiah, in that new and everlasting testament, I do herein give thee a type of thy future deliverance from all thy spiritual miseries. Bp. Hall. Anciently in great houses, and particularly in the East, deep dry pits, called dungeons, were appropriated for the confinement of prisoners. Into one of these Jeremiah was cast, Jer. xxxviii. 6. Dr. Blayney.

12. Turn you to the strong hold,] Repent, and apply yourselves unto God, your only help and refuge, you that are such prisoners, as are not without a good hope and modest assurance of Divine succour and relief. Dr. Stokes. "The strong hold," namely Christ, who is the salvation and high tower of His Church. Poole.

—— that I will render double unto thee;] That I will make you abundant amends for all the evils ye have suffered: compare Isai. lxi. 7. The words appear to allude to Job xlii. 10. W. Lowth.

13. When I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim,] When I have made Judah My bow, and Ephraim My arrow: in the Hebrew phrase the bow is said to be "filled" with the arrow, when the arrow is fitted to it. W. Lowth.

—— and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece,] The passage may be understood with a spiritual application thus: To make way for the establishment of Messiah's kingdom by the publick preaching of the Gospel, and for subduing the nations to My spiritual dominion, I will pick out My first champions from among you of Judah: so that Judah shall be like My bow that I bend, and make ready against My enemies; and Ephraim like

Lowth.* The blood of the sacrificed beasts was part of it received in bowls for the purpose of sprinkling, and the rest poured out at the foot of the altar, Lev. iv. 5—7. Dr. Blayney. This may be a figurative expression of a conquest, to be here understood of a spiritual warfare. Dr. Stokes.

16. — they shall be as the stones of a crown, &c.] They shall be advanced to honour, as the precious stones of a royal crown, or as an ensign, which is lifted up with honour over the heads of the people. Bp. Hall.

17. For how great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty!] How great is the blessing, how great is the beauty, wherewith God shall, upon those victories, grace and adorn His people! Bp. Hall.

—— corn shall make the young men chearful, &c.] The sense is, that by the Divine blessing the young men, who reap the corn, and the maidens, who gather in the vintage, shall both thrive in their respective occupations. Dr. Blayney. Victory is promised in the preceding verse, and fruitful seasons in this. Abp. Newcome. Or probably the expressions are figurative, and imply, that the soldiers in these spiritual combats foretold shall have such joy as the young men use to express at a plentiful harvest, and the young maidens at the end of a happy vintage. Dr. Stokes.

Chap. X. This chapter is a continuation of the prophecy begun in the preceding one, and goes on with a representation of the future prosperities of Judah and Israel, in consequence of the recovery of God's favour. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. Ask ye of the Lord rain &c.] The promise of future plenty suggests the mention of the means by which it might then be procured; namely, supplication to Jehovah, and not to idols. Abp. Newcome.

—— make bright clouds,] Or "lightnings," as in the margin, and in Job xxviii. 26. Great rains usually accompany thunder and lightning: see Jer. x. 13. W. Lowth.

2. For the idols have spoken vanity, &c.] That is, by the answers which the priests gave in their name: for elsewhere they are called "dumb idols," Hab. ii. 18, "which have mouths, but speak not," Ps. cxv. 5. W. Lowth.

—— therefore they went their way as a flock,] Therefore both they and you were driven into captivity, as sheep are driven away and scattered, without a shepherd to guide or protect them. Compare Jer. l. 17; Ezek. xxxiv. 5. Bp. Hall, W. Lowth.

3. — the goats:] "The shepherds" are the wicked kings and princes: "the goats," the wicked common Jews. Dr. Wells. "Goats," rather than sheep, which led My people out of their way. Bp. Hall.

—— for the Lord of hosts hath visited &c.] Rather, "but the Lord of hosts" &c. But now hath God given His people manifest tokens of His favour and protection. W. Lowth. But Jehovah of hosts is about to visit His flock, &c. Dr. Blayney.

—— as his goodly horse in the battle.] See Job's fine description of the war-horse, chap. xxxix. 19—25, whose courage and strength are there displayed, as setting forth the glorious perfections of his Maker. Such, it is said, God would make the house of Judah to be, furnished with every requisite for obtaining military success. Dr. Blayney.

4. Out of him came forth] Or, "shall come forth." W. Lowth. "Him," that is, Judah. Abp. Newcome.

—— the corner,] Or chief. A community is often represented as an edifice, or building: and the corresponding parts expressed by the same name. Hence as the largest stones or timbers are used in the angles to bind together and strengthen the sides of the building, which meet therein, as in a common centre; so the angle or corner metaphorically denotes the chief personage in a community, on whom its strength and security principally depends. Dr. Blayney.

—— the nail,] As a nail is used to fasten the timbers or parts of a building together, it may serve to denote the officers next in command under the chief, by whose means the common soldiers are united and kept steady and in regular order. "The battle bow" means the archers in an army. Dr. Blayney.

—— every oppressor] Rather, "every ruler:" the original word

Before CHRIST about 587.

‖ the riders on horses shall be confounded.

‖ Or, they shall make the riders on horses ashamed.

6 And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them; for I have mercy upon them: and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the LORD their God, and will hear them.

7 And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; their heart shall rejoice in the LORD.

8 I will hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased.

9 And I will sow them among the people: and they shall remember me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again.

10 I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria; and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; and place shall not be found for them.

11 And he shall pass through the sea with affliction, and shall smite the waves in the sea, and all the deeps of the river shall dry up: and the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, and the sceptre of Egypt shall depart away.

Before CHRIST about 587.

12 And I will strengthen them in the LORD; and they shall walk up and down in his name, saith the LORD.

CHAP. XI.

1 The destruction of Jerusalem. 3 The elect being cared for, the rest are rejected. 10 The staves of Beauty and Bands broken by the rejection of Christ. 15 The type and curse of a foolish shepherd.

OPEN thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars.

2 Howl, fir tree; for the cedar is fallen; because the ‖ mighty is spoiled: howl, O ye oaks of Bashan; for ‖ the forest of the vintage is come down.

‖ Or, gallants.

‖ Or, the defenced forest.

4 Thus saith the LORD my God; Feed the flock of the slaughter; is used in a good sense, Isai. lx. 17. The meaning is, Judah shall furnish both civil and military governours. Abp. Newcome.

---

8. I will hiss for them,] I will summon them from distant countries by a certain signal, as a shepherd calls his flock together with his whistle: compare Isai. v. 26; vii. 18. W. Lowth.

—— as they have increased.] In the most flourishing times, such as the reigns of David and Solomon. W. Lowth.

10. I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, &c.] The Prophets, when they foretell the general restoration of their nation, often express it by their returning from Egypt and Assyria. See Isai. xi. 15, 16; xix. 23—25; xxvii. 13; Hos. xi. 11. W. Lowth. Compare Isai. xi. 11. It is probable the same restoration is intended in both places. And it is the opinion of both the Lowths, that Isaiah's prophecy is one that remains yet to be accomplished. Dr. Blayney.

—— and place shall not be found for them.] They shall multiply so fast, that there shall not be room enough in Judea to receive them and their families. Compare Isai. xlix. 20. W. Lowth.

11. And he shall pass through the sea with affliction,] The allusion, both in this prophecy and in that referred to in Isaiah, is to the passage of the Israelites through the Red sea, and over Jordan, when they came out of Egypt: by which is implied at least, that God would interpose with a no less miraculous exertion of power for the future restoration of His people. Dr. Blayney.

—— and the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, &c.] By Assyria and Egypt are meant in general the enemies of God and of His truth, who shall all be subdued and broken in pieces by the kingdom of Christ. W. Lowth.

12. — they shall walk up and down in his name,] Or, "walk in His name;" that is, their lives and actions shall be under the direction of His laws, and He shall give them success, answerable to their upright intentions. W. Lowth.

Chap. XI. This chapter contains a prophecy of a very different cast from the foregoing. The people would not always behave as they ought, and therefore would not always be prosperous. Before their final glorious restoration, an event of a most calamitous nature was doomed to take place; the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem, which is plainly here foretold, and ascribed to its proper cause, punishment for notorious wickedness. The flock, meaning God's people, were under the guidance of corrupt and unprincipled pastors, who sacrificed them to their lucrative and ambitious views. The Prophet by God's command assumes for a while the direction of them, therein becoming a type of Christ, the good shepherd; but is soon obliged to resign His charge, with mutual dissatisfaction on both sides. He receives thirty pieces of silver, as the reward for his services, and casts them by Divine direction to the potter. After this the Prophet is held forth as the type of a worthless shepherd, or a succession of evil governours, who, heedless of the flock, or seeking only to oppress it, at once ruin the flock, and bring destruction on themselves. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. Open thy doors, O Lebanon,] By Lebanon most interpreters understand the temple, whose stately buildings resembled the tall cedars of the forest. The words may likewise denote the destruction of Jerusalem, elsewhere called by the name of a forest. Compare Jer. xxi. 14; xx. 7, 23; Ezek. xx. 46. W. Lowth.

2. — the mighty] That is, trees. The original word is applied to cedars and vines, Ezek. xvii. 8, 23. Under these images the fall of mighty men and the subversion of the Jewish polity are represented. Abp. Newcome.

—— the forest of the vintage] Probably Carmel, (see the note on 2 Kings xix. 23,) which being in the north west of Judea, and here joined with Bashan, in the south east, may denote that the calamity should be general. Bashan was famous for its stately oaks; see Isai. ii. 13. Or, instead of "the forest of the vintage," we may read, as in the margin, "the defenced forest," which gives a good representation of Jerusalem with its fortifications. W. Lowth.

3. — shepherds; — glory] By "shepherds" are to be understood the rulers of the people; and "their glory" denotes their stately habitations. Dr. Blayney.

—— the pride of Jordan] By "the pride of Jordan" those woods and thickets are primarily intended, which rise proudly above the banks of that river, and greatly decorate the scene. But here, in a secondary and metaphorical sense, they are put for the residences of those princes and grandees, who too often like lions devour and oppress the people under them. Dr. Blayney.

4. — Feed the flock of the slaughter;] The actions of the Prophets are sometimes typical; that is, they represent in themselves the persons and circumstances of others. See note on chap. iii. 8. So here Zechariah was commanded by God to act the part of Christ, and to "feed the flock of the slaughter," that flock which their shepherds destroyed instead of feeding them. Bp. Chandler, W. Lowth.

5. — they that sell them say, Blessed be the Lord; &c.] Those, who in effect sell them to their conquerors, regard nothing but their own immediate advantage. Abp. Newcome.

6. For I will no more pity &c.] This verse assigns the reason for calling the people "the flock of the slaughter." Nor can words more aptly describe the calamities which befell the Jews, in the war, which ended in the taking of Jerusalem by the Romans; when the people, having first by their intestine broils destroyed one another, as is set forth at large by Josephus, at length fell into the hands of him, whose predecessor they had owned for their sovereign, "We have no king but Cesar," John xix. 15, at the same time that they disclaimed their Messiah; and who completely desolated the land for their rebellion against him. Dr. Blayney, W. Lowth.

7. And I will feed the flock of slaughter, &c.] Zechariah, representing the Person of Christ, the true Shepherd, says, He entered upon His office, and undertook the care of the flock, chiefly out of regard to the meek and humble among them. W. Lowth.

—— I took unto me two staves;] A staff or crook is the proper ensign of a shepherd: the shepherds of old time had two rods or staves; one turned round at top, that it might not hurt the sheep; this was for counting them, and separating the sound from the diseased; see Lev. xxvii. 32: the other had an iron hook at the end of it, to pull in the stray sheep, and hold them fast. The Psalmist mentions both these, Ps. xxiii. 4. W. Lowth. These "staves" or crooks the Prophet assumed as a badge of his office; and gave them significant names, which are explained ver. 10, 14. Dr. Blayney.

—— Beauty, — Bands;] The one, which I called "Beauty," was the staff of mercy, and gracious and pleasurable protection; the other, which I called "Bands," was the staff of unity for the conjoining of My Church, or of correction and just censure of the offenders. Bp. Hall.

8. Three shepherds also I cut off in one month;] Their kings, their priests, and their prophets. Dr. Stokes. We may probably explain these "three shepherds," of the chief priests, scribes, and elders of the Jews. Christ exposed these as blind guides, and thereby lessened their authority among the people. "One month" seems a proverbial expression for a short time; see Hos. v. 7. W. Lowth.

9. Then said I, I will not feed you: &c.] When Christ found a great part of His sheep proving untractable, He resolved to be their shepherd no longer, but to leave them to be consumed by the common calamities of death, famine, &c.; or to be cut off by their enemies, the Romans; or to destroy one another by their civil discords. See ver. 6. W. Lowth.

11. — and so the poor of the flock that waited upon me knew &c.] The few believing Jews, the meek and humble, who conscientiously waited on me, were convinced, that this was agreeable to the will and pleasure of God. Bp. Hall, W. Lowth.

12. — If ye think good, give me my price; &c.] This being left to their discretion, was rated by them at thirty pieces of silver, supposed shekels, of the value of two shillings and fourpence each. This was the price of a slave, Exod. xxi. 32; and was meant to shew how little they cared for him or his service. Abp. Newcome, Dr. Blayney, W. Lowth.

13. And the Lord said unto me,] The Lord, who said this, could be no other but the Lord Christ. There are many such places, where Christ spoke as plainly by the Prophets in the Old Testament, as ever He did with His own mouth in the New. And it was He, whom this and all the Prophets mean, when they say, "Thus saith the Lord." Bp. Beveridge.

—— Cast it unto the potter:] As a reward only suitable to his labour, and a price only fit for such wares as he sold, which were of the meanest value: see Lam. iv. 2. W. Lowth.

—— a goodly price] He means ironically that it was a pitiful price, that he and his care were valued at. Dr. Wells.

—— And I took the thirty pieces of silver, &c.] I cast them back into the treasury in the temple, where afterwards they were laid out for the purchase of the potter's field.

This whole transaction, performed by Zechariah in a vision, was designed to be an exact representation of the several circumstances, that attended the betraying of the Messiah by Judas; the price put upon Him by the chief priests, to whom, as the governours of the temple, the money was returned; and the use to which the money was applied: see Matt. xxvii. 6, 10. The Jews themselves have expounded this prophecy of the Messiah. W. Lowth.

14. Then I cut asunder mine other staff, even Bands,] As they refused to be united under me their head, so in breaking my other staff I foreshewed the destruction of Jerusalem, the bond and cement of all their tribes, being the seat and centre both of their civil power, and of the Divine worship: see Ps. cxxxii. 3—5. The consequence was, the entire dissolution of the nation, and the dispersion and confusion of all their tribes, whose families could no longer be distinguished after the loss of their genealogies. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 587.

15 ¶ And the LORD said unto me, Take unto thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd.

16 For, lo, I will raise up a shepherd in the land, which shall not visit those that be || cut off, neither shall seek the young one, nor heal that that is broken, nor || feed that that standeth still: but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear their claws in pieces.

|| Or, hidden.

17 [d] Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock! the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye: his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened.

CHAP. XII.

1 Jerusalem a cup of trembling to herself, 3 and a burdensome stone to her adversaries. 6 The victorious restoring of Judah. 9 The repentance of Jerusalem.

THE burden of the word of the LORD for Israel, saith the LORD, which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit of man within him.

|| Or, slumber, or, poison.

2 Behold, I will make Jerusalem a cup of || trembling unto all the people round about, || when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem.

|| Or, and also against Judah shall he be which shall be in siege against Jerusalem.

Before CHRIST about 587.

4 In that day, saith the LORD, I will smite every horse with astonishment, and his rider with madness: and I will open mine eyes upon the house of Judah, and will smite every horse of the people with blindness.

5 And the governors of Judah shall say in their heart, || The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength in the LORD of hosts their God.

|| Or, There is strength to me and to the inhabitants, &c.

6 ¶ In that day will I make the governors of Judah like an hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the people round about, on the right hand and on the left: and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem.

7 The LORD also shall save the tents of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem do not magnify themselves against Judah.

8 In that day shall the LORD defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that is

15. — Take unto thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd.] The Prophet, having hitherto represented the good shepherd, is now directed to assume the dress and equipage of one of a contrary character. In Scripture language "foolish" and wicked are synonymous; for wickedness is folly in the extreme. The instruments of such a shepherd must be suitable to his character: such as a crook made to push and hurt the flock, not to protect or defend them. Dr. Blayney, W. Lowth.

16. — a shepherd] A shepherd in the singular number denotes a succession of such governours, as are described in the following words. W. Lowth.

—— tear their claws in pieces.] The foolish shepherd, instead of being tender and gentle with his flock, is supposed to drag them about with his iron crook, or to overdrive them in rough and stony ground, so as to break their hoofs. Dr. Blayney.

17. Woe to the idol shepherd] Who takes no care of the flock. Such a shepherd is no better than an "idol that is profitable for nothing," Isai. xliv. 10. W. Lowth.

—— the sword shall be upon his arm, &c.] The purport of the passage is, that since, through the misapplication of his power and his understanding, signified by his "arm" and his "right eye," the flock are subjected to desolation or the sword; therefore, as of strict justice, he shall be punished with a deprivation at least of those faculties, which he so fatally misused. Dr. Blayney, W. Lowth.

Chap. XII. This and the two following chapters contain prophecies, which relate entirely to the circumstances of the Christian dispensation. They begin with the assurance of some final victories to be obtained over the enemies of Jerusalem, ver. 1—9, compared with Ezek. xxxviii, xxxix; and Rev. xx. 9: they describe the restoration of the Jews, their conversion and bitter compunction for having pierced the Messiah, ver. 10; their admission by baptism to the privileges of the Gospel covenant, chap. xiii. 1; and their deliverance from the delusions of false prophets. The Prophet then reverts to foreshew the dispersion of Christ's disciples, chap. xiii. 7, compared with Matt. xxvi. 31, and Mark xiv. 27; and the preservation of a small remainder of His converts, whose faith should be tried in affliction. In the last chapter he represents the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans under Vespasian, chap. xiv. 1, 2; the subsequent discomfiture of its enemies, ver. 3; and the final and triumphant establishment of Christ's righteous kingdom, who should be King over the whole earth. Dr. Gray.

Ver. 2. — a cup of trembling] The nations, that besiege Jerusalem, shall be in the same condition as those that are overcome by intoxicating liquors, and thereby bereaved of their strength and understanding. Compare Isai. li 17, 22. W. Lowth.

3. — a burdensome stone] Jerusalem is here compared to a stone of great weight, which, being too heavy for those who attempt to lift it up or remove it, falls back upon them, and crushes them to pieces. St. Jerome, by way of explication, describes an exercise common, he says, "throughout Palestine and all Judea in his days, where the young men, who were ambitious to give proof of their strength, used to lift up stones of enormous weight, some as high as their knees, others to their navel, their shoulders, and their heads; and some placed them on the top of their head, with their hands erect and joined together." Mr. Lowth, by whom this passage of St. Jerome is cited, remarks, that to the same sense Christ saith, "on whomsoever this stone shall fall, it will grind him to powder," Matt. xxi. 44. Dr. Blayney.

4. — I will open mine eyes upon the house of Judah,] I will look down graciously upon My people. Bp. Hall.

6. — like an hearth of fire among the wood,] As coals on the hearth, while their enemies are as a fagot laid upon it. Bp. Hall.

7. The Lord also shall save the tents of Judah first,] Or, "as" He ever did "from the beginning:" that is, by Himself and His own power and wisdom, that the honour may be His own, and man may have no part in it. Dr. Stokes.

—— against Judah.] Or for the protection of the people of Judah, as if it were to be ascribed to them. Dr. Stokes.

Before CHRIST about 587.

‖ † feeble among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the LORD before them.

‖ Or, abject. † Heb. fallen.

9 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem.

10 And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall [a] look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his firstborn.

[a] John 19. 34, 37. Rev. 1. 7.

11 In that day shall there be a great [b] mourning in Jerusalem, [c] as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon.

[b] Acts 2. 37. [c] 2 Chron. 35. 24.

Before CHRIST about 587.

12 And the land shall mourn, † every family apart; the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Nathan apart, and their wives apart;

† Heb. families, families.

13 The family of the house of Levi apart, and their wives apart; the family of Shimei apart, and their wives apart;

14 All the families that remain, every family apart, and their wives apart.

CHAP. XIII.

1 The fountain of purgation for Jerusalem, 2 from idolatry, and false prophecy. 7 The death of Christ, and the trial of a third part.

10. And I will pour upon the house of David, &c.] And I will pour out upon My Church, beginning at Jerusalem and Zion, a great and apparent measure of My Spirit; and, besides those common gifts, I will endue them with the sanctifying graces of My Spirit, and with the spirit of prayer and supplication: and they shall by a lively faith look up to Me their Saviour and Redeemer, whom they have pierced upon the cross: and they shall mourn for that violence, which was offered to the Lord of life, dying for them, even as one mourneth for his only son, &c. Bp. Hall.

The Jews themselves have applied this text to the Messiah. David before described His sufferings under the figure of "piercing His hands and His feet," Ps. xxii. 16; and Isaiah foretold He should be "wounded for our transgressions," chap. liii. 5. W. Lowth.

——they shall look upon me whom they have pierced,] St. John plainly quotes these words, chap. xix. 37, and applies them to our blessed Saviour, of whom alone they can be understood, for none could speak them but One who was both God and Man. That He was God, is plain from the former part of the verse, "I will pour upon the house of David, — the spirit of grace and of supplications:" for the spirit of grace is not at the disposal of any creature, and it is only in the power of God to bestow it. That He was Man, appears from the following words, "Me whom they have pierced:" for if He had not been Man, He would not have been capable of being pierced by them. These words therefore were spoken by Christ, the only Person in the world that ever was or pretended to be both God and Man. Bp. Beveridge.

By the wonderful preservation of this one and only people, distinct from all others for so many ages, Providence hath left room for the season here foretold, when, by "looking on Him whom they have pierced, and mourning," they shall rise again, and be as "life from the dead," Rom. xi. 15. Abp. Secker.

——they shall mourn for him,] The Jews sinned in killing the Messiah, for which reason God removed them out of their land. He will not re-settle them in it, till they shall have repented of their sin. They have been in their present dispersion above 1700 years. Their sins have not been greater in this dispersion, than before, and under, the Babylonian. They are less by the sin of idolatry. Yet then, on a repentance superficial enough, after seventy years God restored them to their land. Now though they fast and mourn, and shew all the external tokens of universal repentance, God will not be propitiated. Doth not God's inexorable severity shew clearly some sin is still unrepented of? What can it be, so big with evils, so extensive in its consequences? They cannot say; but Zechariah saith it for them. It is the piercing to death of Him whom God favoured: and this sin, and this punishment, will not be removed, without an antecedent, general, and deep repentance. Bp. Chandler.

11. —the mourning of Hadadrimmon] Most probably the general mourning for the death of the good king Josiah, who was slain in the valley of Megiddo, 2 Kings xxiii. 29; 2 Chron. xxxv. 22—24. Hadadrimmon is said by St. Jerome to have been a place near Jezreel. The mourning for Josiah became a proverb for a publick and solemn lamentation. Such a national humiliation, it is here said, shall the Jews observe for having crucified the Messiah. Dr. Blayney, W. Lowth.

12. And the land shall mourn, every family apart; &c.] The whole land shall mourn in the most solemn manner; the inhabitants secluding themselves from all social and domestick intercourse, as in a time of general humiliation. See 1 Cor. vii. 5. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

13. —the family of Shimei apart,] Or "of Simeon," according to the reading in the Greek translation of the Seventy. As David, Nathan, Simeon, and Levi, are all reckoned among the progenitors of Christ, Luke iii. 29—31, their families may be mentioned by name, as more particularly concerned in the guilt to be lamented. "For neither did His brethren believe in Him," John vii. 5. Dr. Blayney. Or these different families may be intended to denote the different orders of men among the Jews: "the house of David," or the royal line; "the house of Nathan" the Prophet, and other descendants of the other Prophets; "the house of Levi," both high priest, priests, and other Levites; "the house of Shimei," or the scribes and Pharisees, and their descendants, agreeably to an opinion that this family was noted for breeding up persons eminent in the knowledge of the law. The Prophet, having mentioned the tribes and families of chief note in his time, comprises the rest under the general expression in the fourteenth verse. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth.

The Jews perform to this day the office, to which they were at first appointed, of bearing witness to true religion: being preserved a distinct people, though dispersed through the world, for so long a time, as no one besides from the creation ever was under like circumstances; and demonstrating all the while the uncorruptness of those books, in which both they and we believe, and from which, in a great measure, we prove the truth of our religion against them, as well as against other unbelievers in Christ. Nor is this the whole service of the same kind, to which they are destined. For in God's good time they shall give a new and illustrious, (and who knows how seasonable?) attestation to Christianity, by their conversion; and the "receiving of them" again into the Church shall be as "life from the dead." For so their own Prophets have foretold, that God "will pour upon them the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon Him whom they have pierced, and shall mourn; and in that day shall be a fountain opened to them for sin and for uncleanness: they shall call on His name, and He will hear them; He will say, It is My people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God." Abp. Secker.

[c] 1 Pet. 1. 6, 7.

Chap. XIII. ver. 1. — a fountain opened — for sin and for uncleanness.] The blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin, 1 John i. 7, is manifestly here intended, the Jews being upon their conversion and repentance to be admitted to all the privileges of the Christian covenant. Dr. Blayney.

2. — I will cut off the names of the idols out of the land,] That gross idolatry, with which the world was infected, shall now cease, and the very names and mention of those Pagan idols shall be forgotten, &c. Bp. Hall. The Prophets in general, in their descriptions of the final reformation to be produced in the Church, foretell the utter destruction of idolatry. See Isai. ii. 18; xxx. 22; xxxi. 7; Hos. ii. 17; Mic. v. 13. Dr. Gray.

—— the prophets and the unclean spirit] Perhaps those that prophesy by means of an unclean spirit. See Acts xvi. 16; Rev. xvi. 13. And what is said in the next verse of "any one that shall prophesy," must be understood of those who undertake to prophesy by means of an unclean spirit, or other false pretences. Dr. Blayney.

4. — of his vision,] That is, of the extraordinary communication which he pretended to have received when he uttered a prophecy which he knew to be false. Dr. Blayney. He shall be put to open shame and death, on account of his pretended vision; (Dr. Wells;) or, shall be convinced of his errour, and no more attempt to deceive. Bp. Hall.

—— a rough garment] Or, "a garment of hair;" as in the margin. See 2 Kings i. 8; Matt. iii. 4. They shall not affect the dress of the old Prophets, in order to pass off their impostures. Dr. Blayney. This seems to have been the practice of false prophets, in imitation of some eminent ones amongst the true. Abp. Newcome.

5. But he shall say, I am no prophet, &c.] But he that shall be apprehended on suspicion of pretending to be a Prophet, shall readily acknowledge himself to be no Prophet, &c. Dr. Wells. Disclaiming all pretensions to the character of a Prophet, he shall profess himself to be no other than a plain ordinary labouring man, employed in husbandry business from his youth. This passage may be justly paralleled with Amos vii. 14. Dr. Blayney.

6. — What are these wounds &c.] It was an ancient custom for masters to set a mark on their slaves or goods: and there was sometimes a particular character imprinted upon the worshippers of certain idols; such impressions were often made upon the hands: see Rev. xiii. 16. The accused person is represented as justifying himself by alleging, that the marks upon his hands are not the character of any idol, but only a token of the family, to which he belongs. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

7. Awake, O sword, &c.] O thou, My sword of affliction, awake, arise, and smite Him, that is nearest and dearest unto Me; even Him, that is My coequal and coeternal Son, the image of Me, the invisible God, saith the Lord of hosts: smite thou this Great Shepherd of My Church; and His sheep, His disciples and followers, shall be scattered, and shall both forsake Him and be severed from each other; for even against those disciples also, as well as against their Master, will I stir up enmity and opposition in the world. Bp. Hall. Here begins a new prophecy, importing that the Messiah, the great Shepherd, as He is described in this prophecy, chap. xi. 4; and in Isai. xl. 11; Ezek. xxxiv. 23; though with respect to His divine nature He be "equal with God" the Father, Phil. ii. 6, yet shall be delivered up to death, by God's determinate counsel and appointment: see Acts ii. 23; iv. 28. W. Lowth.

—— my fellow,] Or, as the word means, My "equal." The original word, exclusively of this passage, is found only in the book of Leviticus. There it is often used, and always so as to signify a fellow-citizen, or one upon the same level in society. It appears therefore with the greatest propriety to be rendered in our Bible by the term "fellow" in this place, where the Lord of hosts, foretelling the sufferings of the Redeemer, speaks of Him as equal to Himself. Dr. Eveleigh.

—— smite the shepherd, &c.] Our Lord applies this to His disciples being "scattered every man to his own," upon His apprehension and death, Matt. xxvi. 31; John xvi. 32. W. Lowth. The verse relates to the Messiah and His "little flock," Luke xii. 32. The Prophet goes back to this great subject of prophecy, after having told some events posteriour to Christ's appearance; and then proceeds to other events subsequent to this grand epocha in the history of the Jews and of mankind; some near it, and some remote. Abp. Newcome.

8. — two parts therein shall be cut off and die;] The severe judgments, foretold by our Saviour, Matt. xxiv, shall consume two parts in three of the nation; but a third part shall escape the general destruction, and be left to be dispersed over the world, to preserve a posterity to future generations. W. Lowth. "Two parts and a third," that is, a greater proportion and a less. Dr. Stokes.

9. And I will bring the third part through the fire,] I will cause them to undergo great afflictions, till at last they shall repent of their unbelief of Christ and of His Gospel, and truly turn unto Me by faith in Christ, and so may be then compared to gold or silver refined by the fire. Dr. Wells.

refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say, It is my people: and they shall say, The LORD is my God.

BEHOLD, the day of the LORD cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee.

2 For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.

3 Then shall the LORD go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle.

4 ¶ And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south.

Before CHRIST about 587.

6 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the light shall not be † clear, nor † dark:

7 But ‖ it shall be [b] one day which shall be known to the LORD, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass, that at [c] evening time it shall be light.

——they shall call on my name, and I will hear them:] When I shall have "poured upon them the spirit of grace and of supplications," chap. xii. 10, they shall humbly implore pardon for their sins, and I will graciously hear and answer their prayers: compare chap. x. 6; Isai. lxv. 24; Hos. ii. 21; Joel ii. 32. W. Lowth.

——I will say, It is my people: &c.] For their disobedience "I broke My covenant with them," chap. xi. 10, and they were no more My people: but upon their repentance and conversion, "they shall be as though I had not cast them off," chap. x. 6; and I will renew My covenant relation with them. Compare chap. viii. 8; Lev. xxvi. 12; Jer. xxx. 22; Ezek. xi. 20; xxxvi. 28; xxxvii. 27. W. Lowth.

Chap. XIV. ver. 1.—the day of the Lord cometh,] The day in which the Lord will take vengeance on the Jews for the death of Christ. Dr. Wells.

2.—I will gather all nations &c.] The Romans, being lords of the then known world, had the strength of all nations united in their forces. Compare Jer. xxxiv. 1. W. Lowth.

——half of the city shall go forth into captivity,] The Hebrew word, here translated "half," may be rendered "a portion:" see Judges ix. 43; Dan. xi. 4. Here the city is spoken of; but chap. xiii. 8, refers to the whole land. Abp. Newcome.

——and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.] God shall preserve the other half of the citizens from being cut off by the enemy. Josephus says, there were forty thousand of the inhabitants suffered to go whither they would. W. Lowth.

Or, the passage may be rendered, "and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, even a residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city;" that is, they shall not be killed in the siege or taking of the city, but shall go forth into captivity. Dr. Wells.

The Romans spared the young and useful part of the Jews. However, these were either condemned to the mines in Egypt, or exposed to the sword and to wild beasts in provincial theatres, or sold for slaves. Abp. Newcome.

3. Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, &c.] If, as I am disposed to think, the Romans are meant in the foregoing verse, we may here understand the descendants of the many people, who warred under the Roman standard. Abp. Newcome.

It is no unusual thing for the holy writers to speak of two events together, though they happen at a great distance from each other. See 1 Cor. xv. 23. W. Lowth.

——as when he fought in the day of battle.] As He appeared in behalf of Israel, when He overthrew the Egyptians in the Red sea, or when the ark of God's presence led their armies in the land of Canaan, Josh. vi. 6. W. Lowth. There is great difficulty in this and the following verses, and commentators are much divided in the interpretation and application of them.

5.—Azal:] Probably a place near Jerusalem. Abp. Newcome.

——all the saints with thee.] Or, "with Him;" as the Chaldee and Greek versions read. W. Lowth.

7.—not day, nor night:] These two verses may be expounded with respect to the Jews, that their condition shall be for some time not altogether prosperous, not yet quite desperate. The great crisis of their affairs shall be in a day, which God alone knows; unlike to our days: dark at the beginning, and clear in the end when the light is not expected. W. Lowth. The expressions are most probably figurative. "At evening time it shall be light:" the final prevalence of Christianity after a period of spiritual twilight appears to be intended.

8.—living waters] By "living waters," there is good reason to believe, are meant the gifts and graces of the Gospel dispensation. See Isai. xii. 3; xliv. 3; lv. 1; Jer. ii. 13; Ezek. xlvii. 1, &c.; Joel iii. 18; John iv. 10; vii. 38, 39. That these benefits will be diffused more extensively by the restoration of the Jews, is intimated not obscurely, Rom. xi. 15. Dr. Blayney.

——the former sea,—the hinder sea:] The expression imports, that the whole land shall have a plentiful share of those blessings, which are here described under the metaphor of "living waters." W. Lowth.

——in summer] In those countries most springs failed during the summer season. Abp. Newcome.

9. And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: &c.] Upon the conversion of the Jews, and the coming in of the fulness of the Gentiles, the name of God shall not be given to any idol, idolatry

Before CHRIST about 587.

10 All the land shall be ‖ turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem: and it shall be lifted up, and ‖ inhabited in her place, from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate, unto the corner gate, and from the tower of Hananeel unto the king's winepresses.

‖ Or, compassed.

11 And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem ‖ shall be safely inhabited.

‖ Or, shall abide.

12 ¶ And this shall be the plague wherewith the LORD will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem; Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that a great tumult from the LORD shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbour, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbour.

‖ Or, thou also, O Judah, shalt.

‖ Or, against.

14 And ‖ Judah also shall fight ‖ at Jerusalem; and the wealth of all the heathen round about shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, and apparel, in great abundance.

15 And so shall be the plague of the horse, of the mule, of the camel, and of the ass, and of all the beasts that shall be in these tents, as this plague.

Before CHRIST about 587.

16 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles.

17 And it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain.

18 And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, † that have no rain; there shall be the plague, wherewith the LORD will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.

† Heb. upon whom there is not.

19 This shall be the ‖ punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.

‖ Or, sin.

20 ¶ In that day shall there be upon the ‖ bells of the horses, HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD; and the pots in the LORD's house shall be like the bowls before the altar.

being utterly abolished, chap. xiii. 2; and God shall be glorified "with one mind and one mouth" throughout the world: compare Mic. v. 12—14; Zeph. iii. 9; Rev. xi. 15. The stone, which represents Christ's kingdom, shall then "become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth," Dan. ii. 35. W. Lowth. Jehovah shall be one and the same God alike to all the earth, and not confined as heretofore to one people. See Rom. iii. 29, 30; x. 12; Eph. iv. 5, 6. By "the name of Jehovah," I conceive to be meant the profession of His true religion, which, it is here foretold, should pervade the whole earth. Dr. Blayney.

10. All the land shall be turned as a plain &c.] The expression may signify, that all impediments shall be removed that oppose the advancement of Christ's kingdom. Compare chap. iv. 7; Isai. xl. 4. W. Lowth. Or, shall be "compassed," as in the margin. Jehovah shall encompass the whole land for the purpose of protection, as a plain is encompassed by mountains. Geba is in Benjamin, north of Jerusalem; Josh. xxi. 17: Rimmon in Judah, to the south, chap. xv. 32. Abp. Newcome.

——from Benjamin's gate &c.] See the plan of Jerusalem.

12.—while they stand upon their feet,] As opposed to one, whose flesh wastes as he lies upon the bed of sickness, which is in the ordinary course of things; whereas in this case the person loses his flesh and his strength with it, while he is on his feet, going about in the way of his ordinary business. Dr. Blayney.

13.—and they shall lay hold every one &c.] That is, they shall seek help from one another; but, instead of helping, they shall turn their arms against one another. See Judg. vii. 22; 1 Sam. xiv. 20; 2 Chron. xx. 23. Dr. Blayney.

15. And so shall be the plague of the horse, &c.] This is to be joined to the twelfth verse, the thirteenth and fourteenth being in a parenthesis. Both man and beast in that army shall be consumed in one common destruction. W. Lowth. It is very much in the style of this writer to digress, and after a while to return again to his subject, as if nothing had intervened. Dr. Blayney.

16.—to keep the feast of tabernacles.] See Isai. lxvi. 23; and the note there.

17.—of all the families of the earth] According to the opinion of many learned commentators, by going up to Jerusalem to worship, and to keep the feast of tabernacles, is only meant a conformity to the established worship of the one true God, or, which is the same thing, to the Christian religion. It is repeatedly foretold, that a time will come, when "all the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before Him," Ps. xxii. 27. Compare Ps. lxxii. 11; lxxxvi. 9; Rev. xi. 15. Dr. Blayney.

18. And if the family of Egypt go not up, &c.] Though the fruitfulness of Egypt, especially the upper part of it, depends not upon rain, (see Deut. xi. 10, 11,) yet if the Jews that dwell there, or the rest of the inhabitants, do not join in the solemn acts of Christian worship, they shall suffer the same plague and famine, with which others are threatened; that is, the Nile shall not overflow, as the Targum explains it, whence a famine will ensue. W. Lowth.

——that have no rain;] This must be understood in a qualified sense. Maillet, Pitts, and Bp. Pococke affirm, that they have been witnesses to rain in Egypt; but it does not rain there frequently as in other countries. Harmer.

20.—upon the bells of the horses,] Horses are spoken of in Scripture as almost exclusively used for war. And that bells made part of their trapping, there is reason to believe from a passage cited by Mr. Harmer from Major Rooke's Travels to the coast of Arabia Felix; where that traveller, describing a field-day of the cavalry, says, The horses were sumptuously caparisoned, being adorned with gold and silver trappings, bells hung round their necks, and rich housings. Dr. Blayney. War horses not being wanted, their ornaments shall be converted to sacred uses. Abp. Secker.

——and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls] The meanest utensil in the house of God (see Nehem. x. 39.) shall be as the vessels of silver and gold used in solemn sacrifices. Abp. Newcome.

21. Yea, every pot in Jerusalem &c.] Every thing shall be

CHAP. IX.....Easter-Even,.....Morning.

MALACHI.

INTRODUCTION.

MALACHI was the last of those Prophets who flourished before the Gospel dispensation.

Malachi is represented by some traditionary accounts to have been of the tribe of Zebulun, and a native of Sapha; to have died young, and to have been buried with his ancestors at Sapha: after having assisted as a member of the great synagogue in the re-establishment of order and prosperity in his country. Abp. Usher conceives him to have flourished about the year of the world 3588, which is about twenty years later than the period assigned to him by Blair: but as it appears from the consent of all Jewish and Christian antiquity, that the light of prophecy expired in Malachi, we may suppose that the termination of his ministry coincided with the accomplishment of the first seven weeks of Daniel's prophecy, which was the period allotted for "sealing up the vision and prophecy." This, according to Prideaux's account, must be assigned to the year of the world 3595, but according to the calculations of Bp. Lloyd, to the year of the world 3607, twelve years later: whichever reckoning we may prefer, Malachi must be admitted to have completed the canon of the Old Testament, about 400 years before the birth of Christ; when the great designs of Providence were completed in the termination of the prophetick ministry; and when a scheme of prophecy was unfolded which in its entire contexture was to be accommodated to, and to characterize, the Messiah.

Malachi certainly prophesied some time after Haggai and Zechariah, for in his time the temple was rebuilt and the worship re-established, chap. i. 7, 10, 12; iii. 10; his ministry coincided with or succeeded that of Nehemiah.

This Prophet sealed up the volume of prophecy in the description of that Personage at whose appearance the Evangelists begin the Gospel history, Mark i. 1, 2; and he, who terminated the illustrious succession of the Prophets, and predicted the coming of the Baptist, was in an especial degree entitled to a share of our Saviour's testimony: who declared in terms, which defined the period and extent of prophecy, that "all the Prophets prophesied until John," Matt. xi. 13; Luke xvi. 16. Malachi is likewise elsewhere frequently cited as a Prophet by the writers of the New Testament, Matt. xi. 10; xvii. 10—12; Mark i. 2; ix. 11, 12; Luke i. 17; vii. 27; Rom. ix. 13. Dr. Gray.

Chap. I. ver. 1. The burden of the word of the Lord to Israel.] The word "burden" may be taken here in its larger sense, as the "message" or import of the word of the Lord. The name "Israel," which was at first common to the twelve tribes, and afterwards became peculiar to the ten, as distinguished from the kingdom of Judah, is here given to the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and to all of the others, who joined themselves to Judah on their return from Babylon. These having lately had experience of God's great favour in turning their captivity and restoring them to their own land, should have been very careful in reforming their ways, and sincere in their obedience. But it was otherwise. Many enormities, contrary to God's law, were found amongst them; for which God sends His Prophet to reprove them, and exhort them to repentance: and at the same time, for the comfort of the godly among them, to assure them of the coming of the promised Messiah in His due time. Dr. Pocock.

2. I have loved you, saith the Lord. &c.] I have all along shewn a particular kindness for Jacob and his family, above that of Esau, though they were both the sons of Isaac: and I have lately given a signal proof of it, in having restored you to your own country again after your captivity, whereas I have scattered the Edomites, and dispossessed them of mount Seir, their ancient inheritance, Deut. ii. 5, by the Nabatheans, to which they shall never be restored again. Compare Jer. xlix. 18; Ezek. xxxv. 7, 9. W. Lowth.

"I loved Jacob," in giving him great external privileges: "and I hated Esau," or I shewed him less love, Gen. xxix. 30, 31; compare Luke xiv. 26. I comparatively hated him, by giving him an inferiour lot; and now I have not only laid waste the dwellings of the Edomites, by the incursions of their enemies; but (ver. 4.) they shall remain the perpetual monument of My vengeance. Abp. Newcome. What is here said relates to the preference shown to the posterity of Jacob over that of Esau. Dr. Pocock.

3. — the dragons of the wilderness.] Such great serpents as are commonly found in deserts and desolate places. W. Lowth. See the notes on Ps. xliv. 19; Jer. ix. 11.

4. — They shall build, but I will throw down; &c.] Their endeavours to recover themselves shall be all in vain: God will so notoriously frustrate their attempts, that all people, seeing how ill things succeed with them, and how heavily God's judgments oppress them, shall call them, "The border of wickedness," a land of sinful people, cursed for the sins of its inhabitants, &c. Dr. Pocock.

They were subdued by Judas Maccabeus, 1 Mac. v. 65, and finally by John Hyrcanus, as Josephus relates; and the name of Edomite was utterly extinguished. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

5. And your eyes shall see, &c.] And behold, your very eyes shall be witnesses, both of these My favours to you, and of this My severity to the sons of Esau; and ye shall be forced to say, The Lord hath well deserved to be praised and magnified from all the coasts of Israel. Bp. Hall.

6. A son honoureth his father, &c.] God had all along shewn such fatherly affection and care to Israel, above all other nations, that they could not but acknowledge Him their Father by a peculiar right: and He had, by His especial protection and government of them, so shewn Himself their Lord and Master, that they could not deny His peculiar claim to that appellation. Upon this their outward profession He founds His appeal, reprehending them for withholding from Him that honour and reverence, which not their duty only, but ordinary custom, required them to pay. Dr. Pocock.

—— if I be a master, where is my fear?] One branch of a servant's reverence is fear to offend his master. This fear is a disposition well becoming a servant; and therefore God, as our Master, and by that name of Master, challengeth it of us. Fear and reverence are often joined together, and so jointly required of the Lord's servants, Ps. ii. 11; Heb. xii. 28. Bp. Sanderson.

—— And ye say,] Or, "Yet ye say." W. Lowth. From this verse to chap. ii. ver. 9, the Prophet reproves the priests and the people for sacrificing the refuse of beasts, which according to the law ought to have been rejected; and denounces punishment against the priests for not teaching the people their duty in this respect. Abp. Newcome.

7. — mine altar; — The table of the Lord] These names may be indifferently used for signifying either the altar or the table of shewbread: and by "polluted bread" may be understood either bread, properly so called, or else the flesh of the sacrifices: so that whether we understand by this variety of words the same or different things; namely, the shewbread by some, and the sacrifices by others, the scope will be the same; that is, to declare the contempt they had of God's service, and that not in one particular kind only, but in all. Dr. Pocock.

—— In that ye say, The table of the Lord is contemptible.] They said in effect, that the altar of Jehovah was vile and contemptible, by offering on it torn, blind, lame, and sick victims. Abp. Newcome.

8. — offer it now unto thy governor;] It is the custom of the East for poor people, especially those that live in the country, to make presents to their lords of lambs and sheep. Presents to men, like offerings to God, expiate offences. Sir J. Chardin.

—— will he be pleased with thee,] Certainly not: he would look on it as a great disrespect of his person, and disregard of his honour. How much more shall the Lord, the great Governour of the world? Such conduct was directly contrary to God's command, Lev. xxii. 22; Deut. xv. 21. Dr. Pocock.

Though things of very little value are sometimes offered as presents in the East, those, to whom presents are made, do not think themselves always obliged graciously to accept every thing that is brought. It appears from Bp. Pococke, Norden, and other travellers, that if a present is not somewhat proportionate to the quality of the person applied to, the circumstances of him that offers it, and the value of the favour asked, it is rejected. Harmer.

9. And now, I pray you, beseech God &c.] Therefore now I pray you to repent, and thereon to beseech God that He will be gracious unto us in not punishing the former sins, as they require. This you, the priests, are especially concerned to do, because the wickedness before mentioned has been by your means chiefly occasioned. Will He, that is, God, regard your persons, though ye be His priests, unless ye repent, saith the Lord of hosts? Dr. Wells.

10. Who is there even among you that would shut the doors for nought? &c.] Or, "that doth shut" &c. Dr. Pocock. I have not dealt thus with you, but have abundantly recompensed your services. Which of you is there, among all the Levites of the temple, that hath shut the doors of My temple unrewarded? which of you is there, that hath so much as kindled a fire on Mine altar for nought? yet ye have had no regard to Me again. I will be affected to you accordingly: behold, I have no pleasure in you. Bp. Hall. Having shown the great fault of the priests in their neglect of His service, here He seems to aggravate it in that they receive abundant wages for what they ought to do, even for their least services. Did He require their services for nought, as justly He might, then they might have some pretence for their negligence; but being plentifully rewarded, they ought, if not in love, yet in justice, to be careful. Dr. Pocock.

11. For from the rising of the sun &c.] A prophecy of what should be done at and after Christ's coming, when by the preaching of the Gospel the knowledge of God should be communicated to all nations. The "incense" of the converted Gentiles, and their "pure offering," are devout prayers, Rev. v. 8; holy praises, thanksgivings, and almsdeeds, and works of charity, Heb. xiii. 15, 16; their whole selves, Rom. xii. 1. Dr. Pocock. The conversion of the Gentiles is here prophesied, as usual, under Jewish images; see Zech. xiv. 16. Abp. Newcome.

13 Ye said also, Behold, what a weariness is it! ‖ and ye have snuffed at it, saith the LORD of hosts; and ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye brought an offering: should I accept this of your hand? saith the LORD.

‖ Or, whereas ye might have blown it away.

14 But cursed be the deceiver, ‖ which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the LORD a corrupt thing: for I am a great King, saith the LORD of hosts, and my name is dreadful among the heathen.

profaned and abused My name: in that ye have entertained base conceits of My sacrifices, and have held the oblations offered unto Me, as meat vile and contemptible, and unworthy of any other respects than scorn. Bp. Hall.

The word "fruit" is applied to sacrifice; see Isai. lvii. 19, where "the fruit of the lips" is explained of "the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving," Heb. xiii. 15. W. Lowth. Or it means that portion of the offering, which was allotted to the priests for their provision, and which they esteemed of little value. Dr. Pocock.

13. —ye have snuffed at it,] See Hag. i. 9. Ye say, that attendance on the altar and partaking of its sacrifices are a burdensome task, and ye turn from them with disgust. Abp. Newcome.

14. But cursed be the deceiver, &c.] The former reproofs related only to the priests; here the Prophet reproves the people, that would offer to deceive Almighty God by putting Him off with the worst they had. Dr. Pocock thinks the words are to be understood of such offerings, as of their own accord they vowed to God, which were to be males, Lev. xxii. 19. And if they would not perform their vows in such a manner as God directed, it were better for them not to vow at all: see Deut. xxiii. 21. W. Lowth.

—— my name is dreadful among the heathen.] How much more then ought it to be so among you, whom I have loved and chosen for My peculiar people? This assertion of God, that "His name is dreadful among the heathen," though spoken as of the time then present, and though it was then and is always true, (for His name is often made conspicuous to them by His judgments,) yet because they had not then generally a clear knowledge of Him and His name, it is by some not improperly considered as a prophecy of what should come to pass, by the making of His name more clearly known to all nations by the preaching of the Gospel. Dr. Pocock.

Chap. II. ver. 2. —I will curse your blessings:] I will turn your blessings into curses; compare Deut. xxiii. 5: or rather, remove your blessings, and send curses and calamities in their stead. Or it may mean the benedictions, wherewith the priests blessed, or prayed for, themselves or the people. W. Lowth, Dr. Pocock.

As God can evidently dispose of every thing, so as may best answer His wise purposes of mercy or correction, it is likewise evidently worthy of Him to do it: for the highest of His titles is that of the moral Governour of the universe: and therefore we may firmly believe the Scripture assuring us, that He doth it in fact; that He "makes all things work together for good to them that love Him," Rom. viii. 28, and "curses" the very "blessings" of those who love Him not. Abp. Secker.

3. —I will corrupt your seed,] I will destroy the fruits of the earth, so as to produce dearth and scarcity; or I will cut off your posterity. Dr. Pocock.

—— and spread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts;] Your holiest sacrifices shall be as loathsome in My sight as dung; and I will reject you with as much contempt, as if I threw the very dung of your sacrifices in your faces. Dr. Pocock.

—— and one shall take you away with it.] You shall be esteemed as a nuisance, only fit to be removed out of sight as dung is. W. Lowth. You shall be destroyed, and cast on a dunghil. Abp. Newcome.

4. And ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you, &c.] That is, the message or instruction now delivered to them by the Prophet, to reprove them for the breach of God's law, and to call on them to reform their misbehaviour in His service, to a due and better observance of which they were bound by virtue of His covenant made with Levi. Dr. Pocock.

5. My covenant was with him of life and peace;] The Prophet speaks of the succession of the ancient priests, such as Aaron, Eleazar, Phineas, and their successors, as of one single person, under the name of Levi, (compare Zech. xi. 16,) and says, I gave him My covenant of happiness and security, or I promised him a secure enjoyment of his office of the priesthood. The words allude to Numb. xxv. 12, 13. W. Lowth.

7. For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, &c.] Preserve it, store it up; so as to distribute it. Abp. Newcome. As it is the priest's duty to understand the meaning of the law, so the people ought to resort to them for instruction in any difficulty, that arises concerning the sense of it: see Lev. x. 11; Deut. xvii. 9, 10. For God has appointed the priests His ordinary messengers, to declare His will unto the people, as the Prophets are His extraordinary messengers. The word "messenger," in its usual sense, is equivalent to prophet: see Isai. xlii. 19; xliv. 26; Hag. i. 13. It signifies the same as "an interpreter" of the Divine will, Job xxxiii. 23. W. Lowth.

9. —have been partial in the law.] Not delivering the truth, but wresting the law, either in declaring its meaning, or in determining any thing according to it, from respect to the persons, in whose cases they were to pronounce judgment: see Lev. xix. 15; Deut. i. 17; xvi. 19. This is to be "partial in the law:" the margin says, it is literally, according to the Hebrew, "ye have accepted faces:" it is usually elsewhere rendered "to respect persons." These three expressions all mean the same thing. Dr. Pocock.

10. Have we not all one father? &c.] From this to the 16th verse inclusive the Prophet censures intermarriages of Israelites with women of another country, which Moses had forbidden, Deut. vii. 3; and also divorces, which seem to have been multiplied for the purpose of contracting these prohibited marriages. Abp. Newcome. This grew much into practice in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, who express great detestation of it, Ezra ix. 1; Neh. xiii. 23. W. Lowth.

11. —for Judah hath profaned the holiness of the Lord which he loved,] His holy institution of matrimony among them, not so much in general, as it was a holy institution first made in paradise, but as so limited and restrained among this peculiar people of God, as to preserve them a holy nation unto Him. Dr. Pocock.

——the daughter of a strange god.] That is, the worshipper of a different god from Jehovah: see Deut. xxxii. 19. Abp. Newcome. As those that acknowledge, worship, and serve the true God, are called His sons and daughters, so they, that worshipped any strange god, are by like reason here called the daughters of that god. Hence the Jews say, He that marrieth a heathen woman is as if he made himself son in law to an idol. Dr. Pocock.

12. —the master and the scholar,] Him that persuades or instructs others, that such marriages are lawful; and him that follows such advice. The expression seems to comprehend both the priest and the people. The Hebrew reads, as in the margin, "him that waketh, and him that answereth;" it seems to be a proverbial speech denoting a master and scholar, as our translators render it: an instructor is described as one that "wakeneth the ear" of his disciple, Isai. l. 4. W. Lowth. That some of the priests married strange wives, see Nehem. xiii. 23—30. Abp. Newcome.

——and him that offereth an offering &c.] Though he should think to pacify God with offerings, yet God will not accept them, or spare him. Bp. Hall.

13. And this have ye done again, &c.] And this have ye added unto your other sins; ye have dealt so cruelly and unjustly with your wives, that ye have caused them to wash the altars of God with the tears of their weeping and complaints: so that God, who hateth all iniquity, regards not your offering, &c. Bp. Hall.

14. —Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, &c.] "Because the Lord hath been witness" of the contract or matrimonial promises, made according to His law, and with solemn invocation of His name, "between thee and the wife of thy youth;" that is, her whom thou tookest in thy youth, but with whom thou now dealest treacherously, though she were "thy companion," made so according to the institution of God, Gen. ii. 24; Matt. xix. 5; "and the wife of thy covenant," by mutual covenant espoused to thee. The conditions of this covenant, God, being witness to it, regards as necessarily binding on both parties, and requires the due performance of it from both. Dr. Pocock.

If conjugal infidelity on the men's part hath not all the same aggravations which it hath on the women's, it hath very great ones in their stead. They are almost constantly the tempters; they often carry on their wicked designs for a long time together; they too commonly use the vilest means to accomplish them. And as they claim the strictest fidelity, it is ungenerous, as well as unjust, to fail of paying it. All men must feel how bitter it would be to them to be injured in this respect; let them think then what it is to be injurious in it: and since the crime is the same when committed by them, as when committed against them, let them own that it deserves the same condemnation from the Judge of the world. "The Lord hath been witness," saith the Prophet, "between thee and the wife of thy youth," &c. Abp. Secker.

15. And did not he make one? &c.] Among various interpretations of the words, this seems most probable: That the Prophet puts the Jews in mind of the first institution of marriage in paradise, as Christ did afterwards upon a like occasion, (Matt. xix. 5,) and tells them, that God made but one man at first, and made the woman out of him, when He could have created more women, if He had pleased, since "He had the residue of the spirit," or was the Father of spirits, and so could at His will have created more spirits or souls: but He acted as He did, in order to instruct men, that this was the true pattern of marriage, ordained for true love and undivided affection; and best serving the chief end of matrimony, namely, the religious education of children; whereas in polygamy the children are brought up with more or less care, in proportion to the affection men bear to their several wives. This seems an easy and very probable interpretation, and is confirmed by our Saviour's way of arguing against divorce, and consequently polygamy, Matt. xix. 4, 5, 6. W. Lowth, Dr. Pocock.

——Therefore take heed to your spirit,] Do not give way to an irregular and inordinate passion. W. Lowth.

16. For the Lord, — saith that he hateth putting away: &c.] Howsoever ye may unjustly pretend God's allowance of this common dismission of your wives upon every slight occasion, He professeth to hate these your causeless repudiations of them: and whosoever doth this, what colour soever he sets upon it, yet doth but cloak a violence and wrong, which God will revenge. Bp. Hall.

God hateth such an one, as He doth him that endeavoureth to conceal under his garment what he hath taken by violence. The second marriage is an act of injustice and violence to the former wife. Abp. Newcome.

17. Ye have wearied the Lord &c.] You have tired His patience by your blasphemous speeches, charging His providence with injustice: compare Isai. xliii. 24; Amos ii. 13. The words begin a new discourse, and more properly belong to the next chapter, where an answer is given to the objection proposed. W. Lowth.

God having declared that He would "make His name great among the Gentiles," for that He was "wearied" with the impiety of Israel, now proceeds to proclaim in an awful manner by the mouth of His Prophet, that the Lord whom they sought should suddenly come to His temple, preceded by that messenger, who like an harbinger should prepare His way; that the Lord, when He should appear, should purify the sons of Levi from their unrighteousness, and refine them as metal from the dross, chap. iii. 1—3; that then "the offering of Judah," the spiritual sacrifice of the heart, should be "pleasant unto the Lord," as was that of the patriarchs or their uncorrupted ancestors, chap. iii. 4; and that the Lord would quickly exterminate the corruptions and adulteries that prevailed. He proceeds with an exhortation to repentance; promising high rewards and remembrance to the righteous in that last day, when the Lord should select unto Himself a peculiar treasure, and finally discern between the righteous and the wicked, chap. iii. 16—18. He concludes with another assurance of approaching salvation to those who feared God's name, from that "Sun of righteousness which should arise with healing in His wings," and render them triumphant; enjoining till that day an observance of the law of Moses; till the advent of Elijah, the Prophet, who before the coming of "that great and dreadful day of the Lord should turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers," or produce a thorough amendment in the minds of the people, chap. iv. 1—6. Dr. Gray. With this solemn promise of the Saviour, the last inspired teacher of the Jewish Church closes the word of prophecy, till a greater Prophet should arise again to open it. Bp. Horsley.

—— Every one that doeth evil &c.] A repetition of the old objection against Providence, taken from the prosperity of the wicked, which implied, as the objector thought, either that their works were pleasing to God, or else that He disregarded human affairs, and would never call men to account for their actions. W. Lowth.

Chap. III. ver. 1. Behold, I will send my messenger, &c.] Behold, I will stop the mouths of all such blasphemous cavillers: I will, in My appointed time, send My messenger, John the Baptist, and he shall prepare the way before My personal and visible coming; lo, the Messiah, even the Lord whom ye wait for, shall ere long come into His temple, &c. Bp. Hall.

This is an answer to the blaphemous question of the perverse scoffers of that time, who from the prosperity of the wicked took occasion to question God's justice: God assures them that a time should come, when He would, by executing His just judgment on the wicked, shew that He took due notice of all their deeds. The words, as a Jewish expositor observes, are a most illustrious prophecy of Christ, in which this last of Prophets before Christ's coming reassures the Jews of His coming, and warns them to expect it. Dr. Pocock.

—— my messenger,] The messenger, whose office it is to "prepare the way before the Lord," who is said here to be "coming suddenly" after this His forerunner, is described by Isaiah as "preparing the way of the Lord," who is spoken of as coming, and "His glory" as just ready "to be revealed," chap. xl. 3, 5. A comparison of the passages proves, that this prophecy is justly applied by all the Evangelists to John the Baptist, who is described under the person of Elijah in the following chapter, (ver. 5,) whom all the Jews, both ancient and modern, expected as a forerunner of the Messiah: see the note there. The messenger or prophet, (see the note on chap. ii. 7,) here foretold to be the Lord's harbinger, was to be as much inferiour to the Lord Himself, as servants are to a great person, of whose arrival they give notice. This John the Baptist often confessed, Matt. iii. 11; John i. 26; iii. 28; and the same appears from the following words. W. Lowth, Bp. Chandler.

—— he shall prepare the way] Like pioneers on the march of an Eastern monarch: see Bp. Lowth's note on Isai. xl. 2. Abp. Newcome. He was to usher in the Lord, that was to follow him, and supply the place of harbinger, who was wont to be sent before a great prince, to give notice at the place of the prince's coming, and to dispose matters for his reception, according to his dignity. Bp. Chandler. John the Baptist fully made good this promise by preaching repentance, Matt. iii. 2; by baptizing unto repentance, ver. 11; by bearing witness to Christ, and pointing Him out to the people, that they might believe on Him, John i. 29, &c. Dr. Pocock.

——and the Lord, —shall —come to his temple,] There is hardly a Jew, ancient or modern, that does not expound "the Lord," in this text, of the Messiah. Bp. Chandler. And who by this "Lord" is meant, is agreed on all hands by Christian interpreters; namely, that it is Christ, whom "God hath made both Lord and Christ," Acts ii. 36, and who is "Lord of all," chap. x. 36; by whom "all things were made," John i. 3; by whom all things are sustained and governed; who is, as the root of the word imports, the basis and foundation, not of any private family, tribe, or kingdom, but of all; "by whom are all things, and we by Him," 1 Cor. viii. 6; and whose we are also by right of redemption: and so "He is Lord of lords, and King of kings," Rev. xvii. 14, and xix. 16; and deservedly entitled "the Lord." Dr. Pocock.

Of the characters, under which the Person, whose coming is foretold, is described, the first is, that He is "the Lord." "The Lord shall come to His temple." The temple, in the writings of a Jewish Prophet, cannot be understood otherwise, according to the literal meaning, than of the temple at Jerusalem. Of this temple, therefore, the Person to come is here expressly called the Lord. The lord of any temple, in the language of all writers, and in the natural meaning of the phrase, is the divinity to whose worship it is consecrated. To no other divinity the temple of Jerusalem was consecrated, than the true and everlasting God, the Lord Jehovah, the Maker of heaven and earth. Here then we have the express testimony of Malachi, that the Christ, the Deliverer, whose coming he announces, was no other than the JEHOVAH of the Old Testament. Jehovah by His angels had delivered the Israelites from the Egyptian bondage; and the same Jehovah was to come in person to His temple, to effect the greater and more general deliverance, of which the former was but an imperfect type. Bp. Horsley.

—— shall suddenly come to his temple,] The time of His coming is said to be "suddenly;" namely, after the messenger, that was to prepare His way; and is implied to be under that temple, which they despised and profaned, but of which He should be the glory. Bp. Chandler.

Agreeably to this, the temple was the theatre of our Lord's publick ministry at Jerusalem: there He daily taught the people; there He held frequent disputations with the unbelieving Scribes and Pharisees. But there are three particular passages of His life in which this prophecy appears to have been more remarkably fulfilled: the first is related in John ii. 13—16; the second in John vii. 37—40; the third in Matt. xxi. 1—13. In one, or in all, but chiefly in the last of these three remarkable passages of His life, did Jesus of Nazareth display in His own Person, and in His conduct claim, the first and greatest character of the Messiah, foretold and described by all the preceding Jewish Prophets, as well as by Malachi here, "the Lord coming to His temple." Bp. Horsley.

—— even the messenger of the covenant,] As Jesus of Nazareth was "the Lord" of the Jewish temple, so also was He "the Messenger of the covenant," which had been foretold by Jeremiah and Ezekiel. That covenant was to be different from the Mosaick: general, for all nations; everlasting, for all ages; a law written in the hearts of the faithful. The covenant, which Jesus as God's Messenger propounded, is altogether different from the Mosaick: it is propounded generally, to all nations; and in the terms of it, is fitted to be everlasting, for all ages; it is a law written in the heart. Assuredly, then, Jesus of Nazareth was the Messenger of the covenant foretold by the Prophets Jeremiah and Ezekiel. Bp. Horsley.

——whom ye seek, — whom ye delight in:] This is commonly understood as alluding to the general expectation of the Messiah, and the delight and consolation which the devout part of the Jewish nation derived from the hope and prospect of His coming. Edit.

2. —for he is like a refiner's fire, &c.] In this, and in the 3d and 5th verses, we see the Messiah's business described in various branches, which are reducible however to these: the final judgment, when the wicked shall be destroyed; a previous trial or experiment of the different tempers and dispositions of men, in order to that judgment; and something to be done for their amendment and improvement. The trial is signified under the image of an essayist's separation of the nobler metals from the dross with which they are blended in the ore: the means used for the amendment and improvement of mankind, by the Messiah's atonement for our sins, by the preaching of the Gospel, and by the internal influences of the Holy Spirit, all these means, employed under the Messiah's covenant for the reformation of men, are expressed under the image of "fullers' sope," which restores a soiled garment to its original purity. One particular effect of this purification is to be, that "the sons of Levi" will be purified. The worship of God shall be purged of all hypocrisy and superstition, and reduced to a few simple rites, the natural expressions of true devotion. And "then shall this offering of Judah and Jerusalem," that is, of the true members of God's true Church, "be pleasant unto the Lord." These then are the particulars of the business, on which the Messiah, according to this prophecy, was to come. Bp. Horsley.

3. And he shall sit as a refiner &c.] The third character, that of the Judge, who shall execute God's final vengeance on the wicked, is a character, which Jesus of Nazareth hath not yet assumed, otherwise than by declaring that hereafter He will assume it. His first coming was not to judge the world, but that the world through Him might be saved. Nevertheless "the Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son;" who "in the last day shall come again in His glorious majesty, to judge both the quick and dead." In the mean time the particulars of the business, upon which Messiah was to come, appear no less evidently in the performances of Jesus than the personal characters in His Person. The Messiah was to try the tempers and dispositions of mankind. This Jesus does, by the duties, to which He calls us, and the doctrine, which He has left with us; duties, in which faith alone can engage us to persist; a doctrine, which the pure in heart ever will revere, and the children of this world ever will misinterpret and despise. Thus "many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly." Messiah was to "purify the sons of Levi." The doctrine of Jesus has in many nations reformed the publick worship of God; and we trust that the reformation will gradually become general. Us of the Gentiles He has reclaimed from the abominations of idolatry; and hath taught us to loathe and execrate the rites, whereby our forefathers sought the favour of their devils, for they were not gods; the impure rites of human sacrifice and publick prostitution; things, which it were unfit to mention or remember, but that we may the better understand from what a depth of corruption the mercy of God hath raised us. Blindness, it must be confessed, is at present upon Israel; but the time shall come, when they shall turn to the Lord, and when we shall unite with them in the pure worship of God, and in the just praises of the Lamb. "Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord:" then shall the Lord Jesus come again, to execute what remains of the Messiah's office; to absolve and to condemn. God grant that we may be enabled to "abide the day of His coming, and to stand when He appeareth." Bp. Horsley.

It is not possible to find any other Person, to whom the words of this prophecy will apply. From Malachi, to the destruction of the temple, no one can be named, except the Lord Jesus, who is able to make any pretension to the express characters in this prediction. St. Mark therefore had good reason to introduce his Gospel with this unexceptionable text of Malachi, in order to shew the connexion between the Old and New Testament, and that one began where the other ended. There was no Jew at that time, who did not agree to the application of this prophecy to the Messiah, according to the letter. No Christian since hath been so wild, as to fancy any other sense of it. Even the learned Grotius, so willing and so capable, as he appears to be at other times, to invent double meanings, yields up this prophecy to Christ, as concerning Him only, and no other person. Bp. Chandler.

6. — therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.] Because I am the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, as My name Jehovah imports, and am true to My former promises, (see Exod. vi. 3, 4, 6,) therefore you still continue a people, and are not consumed, as your iniquities deserve. And I will still preserve a remnant of you, to make good to them the promises I made to your fathers: see Rom. ix. 29. W. Lowth.

7. Even from the days of your fathers &c.] From this verse to the end of the 12th, the people are reprehended for withholding the legal tithes and oblations; and are assured that they are under a curse for this breach of the law, and that the opposite conduct will derive on them a blessing. Abp. Newcome.

11. — the devourer] Locusts, and such like devouring insects, (compare Amos iv. 9,) blighting winds, &c. W. Lowth.

13. Your words have been stout against me, &c.] From this verse to the end of the 3d verse of the next chapter the Prophet expostulates with the wicked for their hard speeches; and declares that God will make a fearful distinction between them and the righteous. Abp. Newcome.

16. Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another:] Or, "spake one to another;" the word often is not in the Hebrew. By their pious discourses, they confirmed each other in goodness; and armed themselves against the impressions, which the foregoing wicked suggestions might make upon their minds. W. Lowth.

—— and a book of remembrance was written before him &c.] God took especial notice of what these pious persons did and said: it was as safely laid up in His memory, as if it had been entered into a register, in order to be produced at the day of judgment, to their praise and honour. Compare Ps. lvi. 8; Isai. lxv. 6; Dan. vii. 10; Rev. xx. 12. W. Lowth. The "book of remembrance" is a beautiful allusion to the records kept by kings. See Esth. vi. 1. Abp. Newcome.

17. — in that day when I make up my jewels;] Or, "special treasure," as in the margin. The meaning is, that although God suffer His "jewels" and "peculiar treasure" to lie for a while mingled with the rubbish and dross, without distinction, yet a day shall come when He will sever what is precious from what is vile; "the vessels of mercy" from "the vessels of wrath," Rom. ix. 22, 23; the "vessels of honour," from the "vessels of dishonour," 2 Tim. ii. 20: and then shall appear who are His, and who are otherwise. Dr. Pocock.

18. Then shall ye return, and discern &c.] Then shall you change your minds, and discern that God did always observe the actions of men. Dr. Pocock. Or, "then shall ye again discern;" that is, God shall give you a new proof, that He puts a difference between the good and the bad, and shall thereby fully answer your objections to His providence. W. Lowth.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. For, behold, the day cometh, &c.] The connexion of these words with the preceding is so apparent, that there seems no reason why they should have been separated, and made the beginning of a new chapter. The words themselves are an image or description of the final judgment on the Jews in their destruction, and an image or representation of the last general judgment on all mankind. The former was certainly then to come on the Jews, if not prevented by their repentance, as it was not: the latter is yet to come, but shall in God's appointed time as certainly come, as if it were already present. Of both therefore it might then be said, "Behold, the day cometh;" that is, it shall certainly come: and the description is so full of terrour, that it may be well applied both to one and to the other. The primary intention however of the Prophet seems to have been, to describe the judgment denounced upon the Jews, to whom he was peculiarly sent to reprove them for their sins, and to admonish them of the consequences of impenitence. Dr. Pocock.

—— that shall burn as an oven;] That is, it shall try every man's work, searching it as thoroughly as fire does things that are put into it. Abp. Secker.

—— and all the proud, &c.] Compare chap. iii. 15.

2. — the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings;] The Messiah is called here "the Sun of righteousness with healing in His wings," to signify that His light clears up men's understandings, and chases away the darkness of their minds, and that His rays and kindly warmth will heal all the diseases of their souls. W. Lowth. Compare Isai. lx. 1—3; Rev. xii. 1.

What the sun is to the world, that Christ is to His Church. As the sun gives not only light to the world, but heat, motion, and activity to all things in it; and invigorates the earth, and makes it fruitful; so does Christ, "the Sun of righteousness," cause righteousness to spring up in His Church, and, being long since risen, He shines continually upon it, with healing in His wings or rays, even the wholesome benign influences of His Holy Spirit, whereby He heals us of our unfruitfulness, and all our spiritual distempers. Bp. Beveridge.

—— and ye shall go forth, and grow up &c.] This promise of deliverance was manifestly made good to the Christians, who were warned of God to go forth of Jerusalem, before it was invested by the Roman army: by which means they were rescued from the common destruction, that came upon the unbelievers, and continued thriving and vigorous, (compare Ps. xcii. 14,) whilst the rest of the nation were consumed with divers kinds of death. Dr. Pocock, W. Lowth.

3. And ye shall tread down the wicked; &c.] The righteous shall triumph in the destruction of the ungodly, as conquerors trample on the carcases of those that are slain in battle. Compare 2 Sam. xxii. 43; Mic. vii. 10; Zech. x. 5. W. Lowth.

4. Remember ye the law of Moses &c.] Ye are not to expect any Prophets for the time to come, till the forerunner of the Messiah appears: so your chief care must be to attend to the instructions which Moses has given in his law, the most solemn part of which was delivered to him in an audible manner upon mount Horeb, Exod. xix. 9; Deut. iv. 10. This your lawgiver plainly speaks of the Messiah, and instructs you to expect His coming, and to obey His commands, Deut. xviii. 15. W. Lowth.

5. Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet] The same person who is called the "messenger" or forerunner of the Messiah, chap. iii. 1. It was the unanimous sense of the Jews, that "Elias should first come and restore all things," Mark ix. 12; John i. 21. This they understood of the coming of Elijah in person; see Ecclus. xlviii. 10. Our Saviour has interpreted this Elias to be John the Baptist, Matt. xi. 14; xvii. 12, 13. W. Lowth.

6. And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, &c.] The passage may be translated, "He shall turn the heart of the fathers with the children," &c.; that is, he shall do his part to cause a national reformation, to convert fathers and children, all together, from their evil practices, and restore a true sense of religion, which was then dwindled into form, and so remove "the curse," the utter excision, denounced upon this land; namely, Judea. In Scripture he is said to do a thing, who does every thing proper and likely to effect it, though the effect be not produced. The real Elijah in Ahab's days did no more; nor were his endeavours followed with success. Bp. Chandler.

The Messiah is now come, and the Jews would not know Him, but rejected Him, and despitefully used Him: for which their obstinacy, that "great and dreadful day of the Lord" is also come upon them, and He "hath smitten the earth," that is, them and their land, with such a curse, so terrible a destruction, as makes good all that is here spoken, and shews that not one word of this prophecy is fallen to the ground. They now remain an ensample to all others, who shall despise or neglect, as they did, the offered means of grace. All the admonitions addressed to them, and all God's methods for preparing them for the day of His coming here mentioned, equally concern us in respect of that other day of His coming typified by the former; and it will be necessary for us to apply them to our own concerns, and to make use of them for our benefit, without expecting another Elias, to forewarn and convert us. We have no promise of any such, and it would be to no purpose if we had. We have Moses and the Prophets: we have the admonitions of John the Baptist, and of Christ Himself: and we have the example of the Jews, who were punished for not hearkening to them: and if we will not hear and be warned by them, neither will we be persuaded though Elias or John the Baptist should rise from the dead, or Christ should come again in the flesh to convert us. Sufficient to induce us to prepare ourselves, or to leave us without excuse if we do not, are those admonitions of His, extending to all generations, "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come;" and again, "Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh," Matt. xxiv. 42, 44. Dr. Pocock.
